Young Hollis, on a muse by Mars begot,
Born, Cæsar like, to write and act great deeds,
Impatient to revenge his fatal shot,
His right hand doubly to his left succeeds.
Dryden.

Haply at night he doth with horror shun
A widow'd daughter, or a dying son:
His neighbour's offspring he to-morrow sees,
And doubly feels his want in their increase.
Prior.

To DOUBT,[313] dŏût. v. n. [doubter, Fr. dubito, Latin.]

1. To question; to be in uncertainty.

Even in matters divine, concerning some things, we may lawfully doubt and suspend our judgment, inclining neither to one side or other; as, namely, touching the time of the fall both of man and angels. Hooker.

Let no man, while he lives here in the world, doubt whether there is any hell or no, and therefore live so as if absolutely there were none.
South.

I doubt not to make it appear to be a monstrous folly to deride holy things. Tillotson.

Can we conclude upon Luther's instability, because in a single notion, no way fundamental, an enemy writes that he had some doubtings?
Atterbury.

2. To question any event.

Doubting things go ill, often hurts more
Than to be sure they do. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

DOUGH, dô.[318] n. s. [ᵭah, Saxon; deegh, Dutch.]
1. The paste of bread, or pies, yet unbaked.
When the gods moulded up the paste of man,
Some of their dough was left upon their hands,
For want of souls, and so they made Egyptians. Dryden.
You that from pliant paste would fabricks raise,
Expecting thence to gain immortal praise,
Your knuckles try, and let your sinews know
Their power to knead, and give the form to dough. King.
2. My cake is DOUGH. My affair has miscarried; my undertaking has never come to maturity.
My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest,
Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast. Shakspeare.

DOUGHBA'KED, dô-bâkt'. adj. [dough and baked.] Unfinished; not hardened to perfection; soft.
For when, through tasteless flat humility,
In doughbak'd men some harmlessness we see,
'Tis but his phlegm that 's virtuous, and not he. Donne.

Do'UGHTY, dôû't'ê.[313] adj. [ᵭohtiȝ, Sax. deught, virtue, Dut.]
1. Brave; noble; illustrious; eminent: used of men and things.
Such restless passion did all night torment
The flatt'ring courage of that fairy knight,
Devising how that doughty tournament
With greatest honour he achieven might. F. Queen.
2. It is now seldom used but ironically, or in burlesque.
If this doughty historian hath any honour or conscience left, he ought to beg pardon. Stillingfleet.
She smil'd to see the doughty hero slain;
But, at her smile, the beau reviv'd again. Pope.

Do'UGHY, dô'ê. adj. [from dough.] Unsound; soft; unhardened.
Your son was misled with a snipt taffata fellow there, whose villanous saffron would have made all the unbaked and doughy youth of a nation in his colour. Shakspeare.

Do'WAGER, dôû'â-jûr.[223] n. s. [douairiere, Fr.]
1. A widow with a jointure.
She lingers my desires,

Like to a stepdame or a dowager,
Long wintering on a young man's revenue. Shaksp.
Widows have a greater interest in property than either maids or wives; so that it is as unnatural for a dowager as a freeholder to be an enemy to our constitution. Addison.

2. The title given to ladies who survive their husbands.

Catharine no more
Shall be call'd queen; but princess dowager,
And widow to prince Arthur. Shakspeare.

Do'WDY, dŏŭ'dė.[222] n. s. An awkward, ill-dressed, inelegant woman.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench; Dido, a dowdy; Cleopatra, a gipsy; Helen and Hero, sluttings and harlots. Shakspeare.

The bedlam train of lovers use
T' enhance the value, and the faults excuse;
And therefore 'tis no wonder if we see
They doat on dowdies and deformity. Dryden.

Do'WDY, dŏŭ'dė.[223] adj. Awkward.

No housewifery the dowdy creature knew;
To sum up all, her tongue confess'd the shrew. Gay.

DOWN, dŏŭn.[223] n. s. [duun, Danish.]

1. Soft feathers.

Virtue is the roughest way;
But proves at night a bed of down. Wotton.
Leave, leave, fair bride! your solitary bed,
No more shall you return to it alone;
It nurseth sadness: and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint. Donne.
We tumble on our down, and court the blessing
Of a short minute's slumber. Denham.
A tender weakly constitution is very much owing to the use of down beds. Locke.

2. Any thing that soothes or mollifies.

Thou bosom softness! down of all my cares!
I could recline my thoughts upon this breast
To a forgetfulness of all my griefs,
And yet be happy. Southern.

3. Soft wool, or tender hair.

I love my husband still:
But love him as he was when youthful grace,
And the first down began to shade his face. Dryden.
On thy chin the springing beard began
To spread a doubtful down, and promise man. Prior.

4. The soft fibres of plants which wing the seed.

Any light thing that moveth, when we find no wind, sheweth a wind at hand; as when feathers, or down of thistles, fly to and fro in the air. Bacon.
Like scatter'd down, by howling Eurus blown
By rapid whirlwinds from his mansion thrown. Sandys.

DOWN, dŏŭn. n. s. [ɒun, Saxon; dune, Erse, a hill.] A large open plain; properly a flat on the top of a hill.

On the downs we see, near Wilton fair,
A hasten'd hare from greedy greyhound go. Sidney.
Lord of much riches which the use renowns;
Seven thousand broad-tail'd sheep graz'd on his downs. Sandys.
Not all the fleecy wealth
That doth enrich those downs is worth a thought,
To this my errand, and the care it brought. Milton.
Hills afford pleasant prospects; as they must needs acknowledge who have been on the downs of Sussex. Ray.
How Will-a-wisp misleads night-fairing clowns
O'er hills, and sinking bogs, and pathless downs. Gay.
To compass this, his building is a town,
His pond an ocean, his parterre a down. Pope.

Down, dŏŭn. prep. [aduna, Sax.]

1. Along a descent; from a higher place to a lower.

Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes upward, let him draw after. Shakspeare.
A man falling down a precipice, though in motion, is not at liberty, because he cannot stop that motion if he would. Locke.

2. Toward the mouth of a river.

Mahomet put his chief substance into certain boats, to be conveyed down the river, as purposing to fly. Knolles.

Down, dŏŭn. adv. Not up.

1. On the ground; from the height at which any thing was to a lower situation.

Whom they hit, none on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell
By thousands. Milton.
Down sinks the giant with a thund'ring sound,
His pond'rous limbs oppress the trembling ground. Dryden.

2. Tending toward the ground.

3. From former to latter times: as, this has been the practice down from the conquest.

Wanton languishing borrowed of her eyes the downcast look of modesty. Sidney.
My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my soul its wound;
'Tis love, said she; and then my downcast eyes,
And guilty dumbness, witness'd my surprize. Dryden.
Thy downcast looks, and thy disorder'd thoughts,
Tell me my fate: I ask not the success
My cause has found. Addison.

Do'WNFAL, dŏŭn'fâll.[406] n. s. [down and fall.]

1. Ruin; calamity; fall from rank or state.

Why dost thou say king Richard is depos'd?
Dar'st thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfal? Shakspeare.
We have seen some, by the ways by which they had designed to rise uncontrollably, to have directly procured their utter downfal. South.

2. A sudden fall, or body of things falling.

Each downfal of a flood the mountains pour
From their rich bowels, rolls a silver stream. Dryden.

3. Destruction of fabricks.

Not more aghast the matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burn'd th' imperial town,
Shriek'd for the downfal in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die. Dryden.

Do'WNFALLEN, dŏŭn'fâln. participial adj. [down and fall.] Ruined; fallen.

Do'WNY, dŏŭ'nė. adj. [from down.]

1. Covered with down or nap.

By his gates of breath
There lies a downy feather, which stirs not:
Did he suspire, that light and weightless down
Perforce must move. Shakspeare.

There be plants that have prickles, yet have downy or velvet rind upon their leaves, as stock-gillyflowers and coltsfoot; which down or nap consisteth of a subtile spirit, in a soft substance. Bacon's Natural History.

In her hand she held
A bough of fairest fruit, that downy smil'd,
New gather'd and ambrosial smell diffus'd. Milton.

2. Made of down or soft feathers.

A side breeze from westward waits their sails to fill,
And rests in those high beds his downy wings. Dryden.

Belinda still her downy pillow prest,
Her guardian sylph prolong'd the balmy rest. Pope.

3. Soft; tender; soothing.

Banquo! Donalbain! Malcolm! awake!
Shake off this downy sleep, death's counterfeit,
And look on death itself. Shakspeare.

The night's companion kindly cheating them
Of all their cares, tam'd the rebellious eye
Of sorrow with a soft and downy hand,
Sealing all breasts in a lethean band. Crashaw.

DRAFF, drăf. n. s. [ðpoʃ, dirty, Saxon; draf, Dutch, the sediment of ale.]

1. Refuse; lees; dregs: properly something fluid.

You would think I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals, lately come from swinekeeping, from eating draff and husks. Shakspeare.

'Twere simple fury, still thyself to waste
On such as have no taste;

To offer them a surfeit of pure bread
Whose appetite is dead!
No, give them grains their fill;
Husks, draff, to drink and swill. Ben Jonson.
I call'd and drew them thither,
My hell-hounds to lick up the draff and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure. Milton.
Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
Till vermin, or the draff of servile food,
Consume me. Milton.

2. Refuse; sweepings. Perhaps improper.
Younger brothers but the draff of nature. Dryd.

To DRAG, dråg. v. a. [ᵭnaʒan, Saxon.]

1. To pull along the ground by main force; to draw heavily along.
Such his aspect, when, soil'd with bloody dust,
Dragg'd by the cords which through his feet were thrust. Denham.
While I have any ability to hold a commerce with you, I will never be silent; and this chancing to be a day that I can hold a pen, I will drag it as long as I am able. Swift.

2. To draw any thing burdensome, any thing from which one cannot disengage one's self.
'Tis long since I, for my celestial wife,
Loath'd by the gods, have dragg'd a ling'ring life. Dryden.
Can I, who lov'd so well,
To part with all my bliss to save my lover,
Oh! can I drag a wretched life without him? Smith.

3. To draw contemptuously along, as a thing unworthy to be carried.
He triumphs in St. Austin's opinion; and is not only content to drag me at his chariot-wheels, but he makes a shew of me. Stillingfleet.

4. To pull about with violence and ignominy.
They shall surprise
The serpent, prince of air, and drag in chains
Through all his realm, and there confounded leave. Milton.
The constable was no sooner espied but he was reproached with disdainful words, beaten and dragged in so barbarous a manner, that he hardly escaped with his life. Clarendon.

5. To pull roughly and forcibly.
To fall, that's justice;
But then, to drag him after! For to die,
And yet in death to conquer, is my wish. Dryden.
In my fatal cause your sword was drawn;
The weight of my misfortunes dragg'd you down. Dryden.

To DRAG, dråg. v. n. To hang so low as to trail or grate upon the ground.
From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains. Dryd.
A door is said to drag, when, by its ill hanging on its hinges, the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Moxon.

DRAG, dråg. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A net drawn along the bottom of the water.
Casting nets were spread in shallow brooks,
Drags in the deep, and baits were hung on hooks. Dryden.
The creatures are but instruments in God's hand: the returning our acknowledgments to them is just the same absurdity with theirs who burnt incense to the drag; and sacrificed to the net. Rogers.

2. An instrument with hooks to catch hold of things under water.
You may in the morning find it near to some fixed place, and then take it up with a drag hook or otherwise. Walton.

3. A kind of car drawn by the hand.
The drag is made somewhat like a low car: it is used for the carriage of timber, and then is drawn by the handle by two or more men. Moxon.

To DRA'GGLE, drâg'gl.[405] v. a. [from drag.] To make dirty by dragging on the ground.

Dragnets were made to fish within the deep,
And castingnets did rivers bottoms sweep. May.
Some fishermen, that had been out with a dragnet, and caught nothing, had a draught towards the evening, which put them in hope of a sturgeon at least. L'Estrange.
One of our late great poets is sunk in his reputation, because he could never forgive any conceit which came in his way, but swept, like a dragnet, great and small. Dryden.
Whatsoever old Time, with his huge dragnet, has conveyed down to us along the stream of ages, whether it be shells or shell-fish, jewels or pebbles, sticks or straws, seaweeds or mud, these are the ancients, these are the fathers. Watts.

DRA'GON, drâg'ûn.[166] n. s. [draco, Lat. dragon, Fr.]

1. A kind of winged serpent, perhaps imaginary, much celebrated in the romances of the middle ages.
I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shaksp.
Swift, swift, you dragons of the night! that dawning
May bear the raven's eye. Shakspeare.
And you, ye dragons! of the scaly race,
Whom glittering gold and shining armours grace;
In other nations harmless are you found
Their guardian genii and protectors own'd. Rowe.
On spiry volumes there a dragon rides;
Here, from our strict embrace, a stream he glides. Pope.

2. A fierce violent man or woman.

3. A constellation near the north pole.

And of an earthly cold. Shaksp.

Hear himself repine
At Fate's unequal laws; and at the clue
Which merciless in length the midmost sister drew. Dryden.

If we shall meet again with more delight,
Then draw my life in length; let me sustain,
In hopes of his embrace, the worst of pain. Dryden.

In some similes, men draw their comparisons into minute particulars of no importance. Felton.

22. To utter lingeringly.

The brand, amid the flaming fuel thrown,
Or drew, or seem'd to draw, a dying groan. Dryden.

23. To represent by picture, or in fancy.

I do arm myself
To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously on me,
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shaksp.

With his other hand thus o'er his brow,
He falls to such perusal of my face,
As he would draw it. Shaksp.

Draw the whole world expecting who should reign,
After this combat, o'er the conquer'd main. Waller.

From the soft assaults of love
Poets and painters never are secure:
Can I, untouch'd, the fair one's passions move,
Or thou draw beauty, and not feel its pow'r? Prior.

24. To form a representative image.

The emperor one day took up a pencil which fell from the hand of Titian, who was then drawing his picture; and, upon the compliment which Titian made him upon that occasion, he said, Titian deserves to be served by Cæsar. Dryden.

25. To derive; to have from some original cause or donor.

Shall freeborn men, in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame;
Who from consent and custom draw
The same right to be rul'd by law,
Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.

Several wits entered into commerce with the Egyptians, and from them drew the rudiments of sciences. Temple.

1. The room in which company assembles at court.

What you heard of the words spoken of you in the drawing-room was not true: the sayings of princes are generally as ill related as the sayings of wits. Pope.

2. The company assembled there.

DRAWN, dråwn. part. [from draw.]

An army was drawn together of near six thousand horse. Clarendon.

So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow,
With vigour drawn, must put the shaft below.
Dryden's Fables.

1. Equal; where each party takes his own stake.

If we make a drawn game of it, or procure but moderate advantages, every British heart must tremble. Addison.

2. With a sword drawn.

What, art thou drawn among those heartless hinds? Shakspeare.

3. Open; put aside, or unclosed.

A curtain drawn presented to our view
A town besieg'd. Dryden's Tyrannic Love.

4. Eviscerated.

There is no more faith in thee than in a stoned prune: no more truth in thee than in a drawn fox. Shakspeare.

5. Induced as from some motive.

The Irish will better be drawn to the English, than the English to the Irish government. Spenser on Ireland.

As this friendship was drawn together by fear on both sides, so it was not like to be more durable than was the fear. Hayward.

DRA'WWELL, dråw'wêl. n. s. [draw and well.] A deep well; a well out of which water is drawn by a long cord.

The first conceit, tending to a watch, was a draw-well: the people of old were wont only to let down a pitcher with a handcord, for as much water as they could easily pull up. Grew.

To DRAWL, dråwl. v. n. [from draw.] To utter any thing in a slow, driveling way.

Then mount the clerks, and in one lazy tone
Through the long heavy page drawl on. Pope.

DRAY, drå. } n. s. [ɒɒæʒ, Saxon.]
DRA'YCART, drå'kårt. } The car on which beer is carried.

Let him be brought into the field of election upon his draycart, and I will meet him there in a triumphant chariot. Addison.

When drays bound high, then never cross behind,
Where bubbling yest is blown by gusts of wind.
Gay.

DRA'YHORSE, drå'hôrse. n. s. [dray and horse.] A horse which draws a dray.

This truth is illustrated by a discourse on the nature of the elephant and the drayhorse. Tatler.

DRA'YMAN, drå'mân.[88] n. s. [dray and man.] One that attends a dray or cart.

A brace of draymen bid God speed him well,
And had the tribute of his supple knee. Shaksp.

Have not coblers, draymen, and mechanicks governed as well as preached? Nay, have not they by preaching come to govern. South.

As the devil uses witches,
To be their cully for a space,
That, when the time's expired, the drazels
For ever may become his vassals. Hudibras.

DREAD, drêd.[234] n. s. [ɒɒæd, Saxon.]

1. Fear; terrour; affright; horrour either felt or impressed.

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flatt'ry bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shaksp.

Let not thy dread make me afraid. Job.

Was ever any wicked man free from the stings of a guilty conscience, from the secret dread of divine displeasure, and of the vengeance of another world? Tillotson.

If our fears can be awakened with the dread of evil, he has armed his laws with the terrour of eternal misery. Rogers.

2. Habitual fear; awe.

The fear of you, and the dread of you, shall be upon every beast of the earth. Genesis.

3. The person or thing feared; the cause of fear.

Let him be your dread. Isaiah.

To thee of all our good the sacred spring;
To thee, our dearest dread; to thee, our softer king.
Prior.

DREAD, drêd. adj. [ɒɒæd, Saxon.]

1. Terrible; frightful.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond' proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! Shakspeare.

It cannot be, but thou hast murther'd him:
So should a murtherer look, so dread, so grim.
Shakspeare.

To be expos'd against the warring winds;
To stand against the deep dread bolted thunder.
Shakspeare.

Terrour seiz'd the rebel host,
When, coming towards them, so dread they saw
The bottom of the mountains upward turn'd.
Milton.

2. Awful; venerable in the highest degree

Thou, attended gloriously from heav'n,
Shalt in the skies appear, and from thee send
The summoning archangels to proclaim
Thy dread tribunal. Milton's Paradise Lost.

From this descent
Celestial virtues rising, will appear
More glorious and more dread than from no fall.
Milton.

3. This seems to be the meaning of that controverted phrase, dread majesty. Some of the old acts of parliament are said in the preface to be metuendissimi regis, our dread sovereign's.

To DREAD, drêd. v. a. [from the noun.] To fear in an excessive degree.

You may despise that which terrifies others, and which yet all, even those who most dread it, must in a little time encounter. Wake.

To DREAD, drêd. v. n. To be in fear.

Dread not, neither be afraid of them. Deut.

DRE'ADFUL, drêd'fûl. adj. [dread and full.]

1. Terrible; frightful; formidable.

The rigid interdiction which resounds
Yet dreadful in mine ear. Milton.

The still night,
Accompanied with damps and dreadful gloom.
Milton.

Thy love, still arm'd with fate,
Is dreadful as thy hate. Granville.

2. Awful; venerable.

How dreadful is this place! Genesis.

DRE'ADFULLY, drêd'fûl-ê. adv. [from dreadful.] Terribly; frightfully.

Not sharp revenge, nor hell itself, can find
A fiercer torment than a guilty mind,
Which day and night doth dreadfully accuse,
Condemns the wretch, and still the charge renews.
Dryden.

DRE'ADFULNESS, drêd'fûl-nês. n. s. [from dreadful.] Terribleness; frightfulness.

It may justly serve for matter of extreme terrour to the wicked, whether they regard the dreadfulness of the day in which they shall be tried, or the quality of the judge by whom they are to be tried. Hakewill on Providence.

DRE'ADLESNESS, drêd'lês-nês. n. s. [from dreadless.] Fearlesness; intrepidity; undauntedness.

Zelmane, to whom danger then was a cause of dreadlessness, all the composition of her elements being nothing but fiery, with swiftness of desire crossed him. Sidney.

DRE'ADLESS, drêd'lês. adj. [from dread.] Fearless; unaffrighted; intrepid; unshaken; undaunted, free from terrour.

Dreadless, said he, that shall I soon declare;
It was complain'd, that thou hadst done great tort
Unto an aged woman. Fairy Queen.

All night the dreadless angel, unpursu'd,
Through heav'n's wide champaign held his way.
Milton.

DREAM, drême.[227] n. s. [droom, Dutch. This word is derived by Meric Casaubon, with more ingenuity than truth from δρᾶμα τὸ βίου, the comedy of life; dreams being, as plays are, a representation of something which does not really happen. This conceit Junius has enlarged by quoting an epigram;

Σκηνὴ πᾶς ὁ βίος καὶ παίγνιον ἢ μᾶλλον παίζειν,
Τὴν σπουδὴν μεταθεῖς, ἢ φέρε τὰς ὀδύνας.
[Anthol.

1. A phantasm of sleep; the thoughts of a sleeping man.

We eat our meat in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of those terrible dreams
That shake us nightly. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

In dreams they fearful precipices tread;
Or, shipwreck'd, labour to some distant shore.
Dryden.

Glorious dreams stand ready to restore
The pleasing shapes of all you saw before. Dryd.

2. An idle fancy; a wild conceit, a groundless suspicion.

Let him keep
A hundred knights; yes, that on ev'ry dream,
Each buz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,
He may enguard his dotage. Shakspeare.

To DREAM, drême. v. n. preter. dreamed, or dreamt. [from the noun.]

1. To have the representation of something in sleep.

Dreaming is the having of ideas, whilst the outward senses are stopped, not suggested by any external objects or known occasions, nor under the rule or conduct of the understanding. Locke.

I dreamed that I was conveyed into a wide and boundless plain. Tatler.

2. It has of before the noun.

I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
But, being awake, I do despise my dream.
Shakspeare.

I have nightly since
Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me:
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakspeare.

3. To think; to imagine.

These boys know little they are sons to th' king,
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive.
Shakspeare.

He never dreamed of the deluge, nor thought that first orb more than a transient crust. Burnet.

He little dream'd how nigh he was to care,
Till treach'rous fortune caught him in the snare.
Dryden.

4. To think idly.

They dream on in a constant course of reading, but not digesting. Locke.

I began to dream of nothing less than the immortality of my work. Smith.

5. To be sluggish; to idle.

Why does Antony dream out his hours,
And tempts not fortune for a noble day? Dryden.

To DREAM, drême. v. a. To see in a dream.

The Macedon, by Jove's decree,
Was taught to dream an herb for Ptolemy. Dryd.

At length in sleep their bodies they compose,
And dreamt the future fight, and early rose.
Dryden.

DRE'AMER, drê'mûr[98] n. s. [from dream.]

1. One who has dreams; one who has fancies in his sleep.

The vision said, and vanish'd from his sight;
The dreamer waken'd in a mortal fright. Dryd.

If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his head into it, he may perhaps be wakened into a certainty. Locke.

2. An idle fanciful man; a visionary.

Sometime he angers me
With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
Of dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies. Shaksp.

3. A mope; a man lost in wild imagination; a reveur.

The man of sense his meat devours,
But only smells the peel and flow'rs:
And he must be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie and gnaws the streamer. Prior.

4. A sluggard; an idler.

DRE'AMLESS, drême'lês. adj. [from dream.] Free from dreams.

The savages of Mount Atlas, in Barbary, were reported to be both nameless and dreamless.
Camden's Remains.

DREAR, drêre.[227] n. s. Dread; terrour.

The ill-fac'd owl, death's dreadful messenger;
The hoarse night raven, trump of doleful drear.
Spenser.

DREAR, drêre. adj. [ᵹpeoꝛiᵹ, Saxon, dreary.] Mournful; dismal; sorrowful.

In urns and altars round,
A drear and dying sound
Affrights the flamens at their service quaint.
Milton.

DRE'ARIHEAD, drêre'ê-hêd. n. s. [from dreary.] Horrour; dismalness: a word now no longer in use.

That shortly from the shape of womanhed,
Such as she was when Pallas she attempted,
She grew to hideous shape of drearihead,
Pined with grief of folly late repented. Spenser.

DRE'ARIMENT, drêre'ê-mênt. n. s. [from dreary.] This word is now obsolete.

1. Sorrow; dismalness; melancholy.

I teach the woods and waters to lament
Your doleful dreariment. Spenser's Epithalamium.

2. Horrour; dread; terrour.

Almighty Jove, in wrathful mood,
To wreak the guilt of mortal sins is bent;
Hurls forth his thundering dart with deadly feud,
Inroll'd in flames and smouldering dreariment.
Fairy Queen.

DRE'ARY, drê'rê. adj. [ᵹpeoꝛiᵹ, Saxon.] This word is scarcely used but in poetical diction.

1. Sorrowful; distressful.

The messenger of death, the ghastly owl,
With dreary shrieks did also yell;
And hungry wolves continually did howl
At her abhorred face, so horrid and so foul.
Fairy Queen.

2. Gloomy; dismal; horrid.

Obscure they went through dreary shades, that led
Along the vast dominions of the dead. Dryden.

Towns, forests, herds, and men promiscuous drown'd,
With one great death deform the dreary ground.
Prior.

DREDGE, drêdje. n. s. [To dretch, in Chaucer, is to delay; perhaps a net so often stopped may be called from this.] A kind of net.

For oysters they have a peculiar dredge; a thick, strong net, fastened to three spills of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern, gathering whatsoever it meeteth lying in the bottom. Carew.

To DREDGE, drêdje. v. a. [from the noun.] To gather with a dredge.

DRE'DGER, drêd'jûr. n. s. [from dredge.] One who fishes with a dredge.

DRE'GGISH, drêg'gish. adj. [from dregs.] Foul with lees; feculent.

To give a strong taste to this dreggish liquor, they fling in an incredible deal of broom or hops, whereby small beer is rendered equal in mischief to strong. Harvey.

DRE'GGY, drêg'gê.[382] adj. [from dregs.] Containing dregs; consisting of dregs; muddy; feculent.

These num'rous veins, such is the curious frame,
Receive the pure insinuating stream;
But no corrupt or dreggy parts admit,
To form the blood or feed the limbs unfit.
Blackmore.

Ripe grapes being moderately pressed, their juice may, without much dreggy matter, be squeezed out.
Boyle.

DREGS, drêgz. n. s. [ᵹpeꝛᵹen, Saxon; dreggian, Islandick.]

1. The sediment of liquors; the lees; the grounds; the feculence.

Fain would we make him author of the wine,
If for the dregs we could some other blame. Davies.

They often tread destruction's horrid path,
And drink the dregs of the revenger's wrath.
Sandys.

We from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give.
Dryden.

Such run on poets in a raging vein,
Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain. Pope.

2. Any thing by which purity is corrupted.

The king by this journey purged a little the dregs and leaven of the northern people, that were before in no good affections towards him. Bacon.

3. Dross; sweepings; refuse.

Heav'n's favourite thou, for better fates design'd
Than we, the dregs and rubbish of mankind. Dryd.

What diffidence we must be under whether God will regard our sacrifice, when we have nothing to offer him but the dregs and refuse of life, the days of loathing and satiety, and the years in which we have no pleasure. Rogers.

To DREIN, drâne.[249] v. n. [See DRAIN.] To empty. The same with drain: spelt differently perhaps by chance.

She is the sluice of her lady's secrets; 'tis but setting her mill a-going, and I can drein her of them all. Congreve.

'Tis drein'd and emptied of its poison now;
A cordial draught. Southern.

To DRENCH, drênsh. v. a. [ᵹpencan, Sax.]

1. To wash; to soak; to steep.

Our garments being as they were drenched in the sea, hold notwithstanding their freshness and glosses. Shaksp.

To-day deep thoughts learn with me to drench
In mirth, that after no repenting draws. Milton.

Now dam the ditches, and the floods restrain;
Their moisture has already drench'd the plain.
Dryden.

2. To saturate with drink or moisture: in an ill sense.

In swinish sleep
Their drenched natures lie, as in a death. Shaksp.

Too oft, alas! has mutual hatred drench'd
Our swords in native blood. Philips.

If any of your cattle are infected, speedily let both sick and well blood, and drench them.
Mortimer.

DRENCH, drênsh. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A draught; a swill: by way of abhorrence or contempt.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumb not still,
That in our proper motion we ascend. Milton.

2. Physick for a brute.

A drench is a potion or drink prepared for a sick horse, and composed of several drugs in a liquid form. Farrier's Dictionary.

Harry, says she, how many hast thou kill'd today? Give my roan horse a drench, says he; and answers, fourteen, an hour after. Shaksp.

A drench of wine has with success been us'd,
And through a horn the gen'rous juice infus'd.
Dryden.

3. Physick that must be given by violence.

Their councils are more like a drench that must be poured down, than a draught which must be leisurely drank if I liked it. King Charles.

4. A channel of water.

DRE'NCHER, drênsh'ûr. n. s. [from drench.]

1. One that dips or steeps any thing.

2. One that gives physick by force. Dict.

DRENT, drênt. participle. Probably corrupted from drenched, to make a proverbial rhyme to brent, or burnt.

What flames, quoth he, when I the present see
In danger rather to be drent than brent? F. Queen.

To DRESS, drês. v. a. [dresser, French.]

1. To clothe; to invest with clothes.

The first request
He made was, like his brothers to be dress'd;
And, as his birth requir'd, above the rest. Dryden.

2. To clothe pompously or elegantly. It is used with up and out to enforce it.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beauteously; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed; for then they paint and smile, and dress themselves up in tinsel, and glass gems, and counterfeit imagery. Taylor.

Few admir'd the native red and white,
Till poets dress'd them up to charm the sight. Dryden.

Lollia Paulina wore, in jewels, when dressed out, the value of three hundred twenty-two thousand nine hundred and sixteen pounds thirteen shillings and four-pence. Arbuthnot.

The mighty trunk, half rent with rugged rift,
Doth roll adown the rocks, and fall with fearful drift. Fairy Queen.

3. Any thing driven at random.

Some log, perhaps, upon the waters swam
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.

4. Any thing driven or born along in a body.

The ready racers stand;
Swift as on wings of wind upborne they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky. Pope.

5. A storm; a shower.

Our thunder from the south
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town. Shak.

6. A heap or stratum of any matter thrown together by the wind: as, a snowdrift, a deep body of snow.

7. Tendency or aim of action.

The particular drift of every act, proceeding eternally from God, we are not able to discern, and therefore cannot always give the proper and certain reason of his works. Hooker.

Their drift 'comes known and they discover'd are;
For some, of many, will be false of course. Daniel.

8. Scope of a discourse.

The main drift of his book being to prove that what is true is impossible to be false, he opposes nobody. Tillotson.

The drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels. Addison.

This, by the stile, the manner, and the drift,
'Twas thought could be the work of none but Swift. Swift.

To Drift, drîft. v. a. [from the noun.]

The driver runs up to him immediately, and beats him almost to death. L'Estrange.

The multitude or common rout, like a drove of sheep, or an herd of oxen, may be managed by any noise or cry which their driver shall accustom them to. South.

3. One who drives a carriage.

Not the fierce driver with more fury lends
The sounding lash, and, ere the stroke descends,
Low to the wheels his pliant body bends. Dryden.

To DRI'ZZLE, driz'zl.[405] v. n [driselen, German, to shed dew.] To shed in small slow drops, as winter rains.

When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle dew. Shakspeare.

Though now this face of mine be hid
In sap-consuming winter's drizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shaksp.

To DRI'ZZLE, driz'zl. v. n. To fall in short slow drops.

And drizzling drops that often do redound,
The firmest flint doth in continuance wear. Spenser.

Her heart did melt in great compassion,
And drizzling tears did shed for pure affection. Fairy Queen.

This day will pour down,
If I conjecture aught, no drizzling show'r,
But rattling storm of arrows barb'd with fire. Milton.

The neighbouring mountains, by reason of their height, are more exposed to the dews and drizzling rains than any of the adjacent parts. Addison.

2. A number of sheep driven. To an herd of oxen we regularly oppose, not a drove, but a flock, of sheep.

A drove of sheep, or an herd of oxen, may be managed by any noise or cry which the drivers shall accustom them to. South.

3. Any collection of animals.

The sounds and seas, with all their finny drove,
Now to the moon in wavering morrice move. Milt.

4. A crowd; a tumult.

But if to fame alone thou dost pretend,
The miser will his empty palace lend,
Set wide with doors, adorn'd with plated brass,
Where droves, as at a city-gate, may pass. Dryd.

DRO'VEN, drô'vn. part. from drive. Not now used.

This is fought indeed;
Had we so done at first, we had droven them home
With clouts about their heads. Shakspeare.

DRO'VER, drô'vûr. n. s. [from drove.] One that fats oxen for sale, and drives them to market.

The prince hath got your Hero.
——I wish him joy of her.
—Why, that's spoken like an honest drover; so they sell bullocks. Shakspeare.

The drover who his fellow drover meets
In narrow passages of winding streets. Dryden.

DROUGHT, drôût.[313 393] n. s. [ðpuzoðe, Saxon.]

1. Dry weather; want of rain.

O earth! I will befriend thee more with rain
Than youthful April shall with all his showers:
In summer's drought I'll drop upon thee still. Shakspeare.

Great droughts in summer, lasting till the end of August, some gentle showers upon them, and then some dry weather, portend a pestilent summer the year following. Bacon.

To south the Persian bay,
And inaccessible th' Arabian drought. Milton.

As torrents in the drowth of summer fail,
So perish'd man from death shall never rise. Sandys.

They were so learned in natural philosophy, that they foretold earthquakes and storms, great droughts, and great plagues. Temple.

In a drought, the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain. Dryd.

Upon a shower, after a drought, earthworms and land-snails innumerable come out of their lurking-places. Ray.

2. Thirst; want of drink.

His carcase, pin'd with hunger and with drought. Milton.

One, whose drought
Yet scarce allay'd, still eyes the current stream,
Whose liquid murmur heard new thirst excites. Milton.

DROU'GHTINESS, drôû'tê-nês. n. s. [from droughty.] The state of wanting rain.

DRO'UGHTY, drôû'tê. adj. [from drought.]

1. Wanting rain; sultry.

That a camel, so patient of long thirst, should be bred in such droughty and parched countries, where it is of such eminent use for travelling over those dry and sandy desarts where no water is to be had, must be acknowledged an act of providence and design. Ray on Creation.

2. Thirsty; dry with thirst.

If the former years
Exhibit no supplies, alas! thou must
With tasteless water wash thy droughty throat. Philips.

To DROWN, drôûn.[323] v. a. [from drunden, below, German, Skinner; from ðpuncnian, Saxon. Lye.]

1. To suffocate in water.

They would soon drown those that refused to swim down the popular stream. King Charles.

When of God's image only eight he found
Snatch'd from the wat'ry grave, and sav'd from nations drown'd. Prior.

2. To overwhelm in water.

Or so much as it needs
To dew the sovereign flow'r, and drown the weeds. Shakspeare.

Galleys might be drowned in the harbour with the great ordnance, before they could be rigged. Knolles' History.

3. To overflow; to bury in an inundation; to deluge.

Betwixt the prince and parliament we stand,
The barriers of the state on either hand:
May neither overflow, for then they drown the land. Dryden.

4. To immerge; to lose in any thing.

Most men being in sensual pleasures drown'd,
It seems their souls but in their senses are. Davies.

5. To lose in something that overpowers or covers.

Who cometh next will not follow that course, however good, which his predecessors held, for doubt to have his doings drowned in another man's praise. Spenser on Ireland.

That the brightness of the sun doth drown our discerning of the lesser lights, is a popular errour. Wotton.

My private voice is drown'd amid the senate. Addison.

Some aged man who lives this act to see,
And who in former times remember'd me,
May say, the son, in fortitude and fame,
Outgoes the mark, and drowns his father's name. Dryden.

To DROWN, drôûn. v. n. To be suffocated in the waters.

There be, that keep them out of fire, and yet was never burned; that beware of water, and yet was never nigh drowning. Ascham.

Methought what pain it was to drown!
What dreadful noise of waters in my ears! Shaks.

To DROWSE, dröûz.[323] v. a. [droosen, Dutch.] To make heavy with sleep.

There gentle sleep
First found me, and with soft oppression seiz'd
My drowsed senses uncontroul'd. Milton.

To DROWSE, dröûz v. n.

1. To slumber; to grow heavy with sleep.

All their shape
Spangled with eyes, more numerous than those
Of Argus; and more wakeful than to drowse,
Charm'd with Arcadian pipe. Milton.

2. To look heavy; not cheerful.

They rather drows'd, and hung their eyelids down,
Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries. Shaks.

DRO'WSIHED, dröû'zê-hêd. n. s. Sleepiness; inclination to sleep. Obsolete.

The royal virgin shook off drowsihed;
And rising forth out of her baser boure,

DRO'WSILY, dröû'zê-lê. adv. [from drowsy]

1. Sleepily; heavily; with an inclination to sleep.

The air swarms thick with wand'ring deities,
Which drowsily like humming beetles rise. Dryd.

2. Sluggishly; idly; slothfully; lazily.

We satisfy our understanding with the first things, and, thereby satiated, slothfully and drowsily sit down. Raleigh.

DRO'WSINESS, dröû'zê-nês. n. s. [from drowsy.]

1. Sleepiness; heaviness with sleep; disposition to sleep.

What a strange drowsiness possesses them! Shakspeare.

In deep of night, when drowsiness
Hath lock'd up mortal sense, then listen I
To the celestial syren's harmony. Milton.

What succour can I hope the muse will send,
Whose drowsiness hath wrong'd the muse's friend? Crashaw.

He passes his whole life in a dozed condition, between sleeping and waking, with a kind of drowsiness and confusion upon his senses. South.

He that from his childhood has made rising betimes familiar to him, will not waste the best part of his life in drowsiness and lying a-bed. Locke.

A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, and lassitude, are signs of a plentiful meal in young people. Arbuthnot.

2. Idleness; indolence; inactivity.

It falleth out well to shake off your drowsiness; for it seemed to be the trumpet of a war. Bacon.

DRO'WSY, dröû'zê. adj. [from drowse.]

1. Sleepy; heavy with sleep; lethargick.

Drowsy am I, and yet can rarely sleep. Sidney.

Men drowsy, and desirous to sleep, or before the fit of an ague, do use to yawn and stretch. Bacon's Natural History.

The flowers, call'd out of their beds,
Start and raise up their drowsy heads. Cleaveland.

Drunken at last, and drowsy they depart
Each to his house. Dryden.

2. Heavy; lulling; causing sleep.

Sir Guyon, mindful of his vows yplight,
Uprose from drowsy couch. Fairy Queen.

While thus she rested, on her arm reclin'd,
The hoary willows waving with the wind,
And feather'd quires that warbled in the shade,
And purling streams that through the meadow stray'd,
In drowsy murmurs lull'd the gentle maid. Addison.

3. Stupid; dull.

Those inadvertencies, a body would think, even our author, with all his drowsy reasoning, could never have been capable of. Atterbury.

To DRUB, drûb. v. a. [drubber, to kill, Dan.] To thrash; to beat; to bang; to thump; to thwack; to cudgel. A word of contempt.

He that is valiant, and dares fight,
Though drubb'd, can lose no honour by 't. Hudibras.

The little thief had been soundly drubb'd with a good honest cudgel. L'Estrange.

Though the bread be not mine, yet, if it had been less than weight, I should have been drubbed. Locke.

DRUB, drûb. n. s. [from the verb.] A thump; a knock; a blow.

The blows and drubs I have receiv'd,
Have bruis'd my body, and bereav'd
My limbs of strength. Hudibras.

By setting an unfortunate mark on their followers, they have exposed them to innumerable drubs and contusions. Addison.

To DRUDGE, drûdje. v. n. [ðnedcan, to vex, Saxon; draghen, to carry, Dutch.] To labour in mean offices; to toil without honour or dignity; to work hard; to slave.

And to crack'd fiddle, and hoarse tabour,
In merriment, did drudge and labour. Hudibras.

The poor sleep little; we must learn to watch
Our labours late, and early every morning,
Midst winter frosts; then clad and fed with sparing,
Rise to our toils, and drudge away the day. Otway.

Advantages obtained by industry, directed by philosophy, can never be expected from drudging ignorance. Glanville.

Soon he came to court,
Proffering for hire his service at the gate,
To drudge, draw water, and to run or wait. Dryd.

I made no such bargain with you, to live always drudging. Dryden.

What is an age, in dull renown drudg'd o'er!
One little single hour of love is more. Granville.

DRUDGE, drûdje. n. s. [from the verb.] One employed in mean labour; a slave; one doomed to servile occupation.

To conclude, this drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me. Shaksp.

He sits above, and laughs the while
At thee, ordain'd his drudge, to execute
Whate'er his wrath shall bid. Milton.

Art thou our slave,
Our captive, at the publick mill our drudge,
And dar'st thou at our sending and command,
Dispute thy coming? Milton.

He is content to be their drudge,
And on their errands gladly trudge. Hudibras.

The hard master makes men serve him for nought, who rewards his drudges and slaves with nothing but shame, and sorrow, and misery. Tillotson.

DRU'DGER, drûdje'ûr. n. s. [from drudge.]

1. A mean labourer.

2. The drudgingbox; the box out of which flower is thrown on roast meat. Dict.

DRU'DGERY, drûdje'ûr-ê. n. s. [from drudge.] Mean labour; ignoble toil; dishonourable work; servile occupation.

My old dame will be undone for one to do her husbandry and her drudgery. Shaksp.

Were there not instruments for drudgery as well as offices of drudgery? Were there not people to receive orders, as well as others to give and authorize them? L'Estrange.

You do not know the heavy grievances,
The toils, the labours, weary drudgeries
Which they impose. Southern.

To thee that drudgery of pow'r I give;
Cares be thy lot: reign thou, and let me live. Dry.

Paradise was a place of bliss, as well as immortality, without drudgery, and without sorrow. Locke.

Even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews

It is now handled by every dirty wench, and condemned to do her drudgery. Swift.

DRU'DGINGBOX, drûdje'ing-bôks. n. s. [drudging and box.] The box out of which flower is sprinkled upon roast meat.

But if it lies too long, the crackling's pall'd,
Not by the drudging-box to be recall'd. King's C.

DRU'DGINGLY, drûdje'ing-lê. adv. [from drudging.] Laboriously; toilsomely.

He does now all the meanest and triflingest things himself drudgingly, without making use of any inferiour or subordinate minister. Ray.

DRUG, drûg. n. s. [drogue, Fr.]

1. An ingredient used in physick; a medicinal simple.

A fleet descried
Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds
Close sailing from Bengala, or the isles
Of Ternate and Tidore, whence merchants bring Their spicy drugs. Milton.

Judicious physick's noble art to gain,
He drugs and plants explor'd, alas! in vain. Smith.

Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl,
Temper'd with drugs of sov'reign use, t' assuage
The boiling bosom of tumultuous rage. Pope.

In the names of drugs and plants, the mistake in a word may endanger life. Baker.

2. It is used sometimes for poison.

Mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
Is death to any he that utters them. Shaksp.

And yet no doubts the poor man's draught control;
He dreads no poison in his homely bowl:
Then fear the deadly drug, when gems divine
Enchase the cup, and sparkle in the wine. Dryd.

3. Any thing without worth or value; any thing of which no purchaser can be found.

Each noble vice
Shall bear a price,
And virtue shall a drug become:
An empty name,
Was all her fame,
But now she shall be dumb. Dryden.

4. A drudge. This seems the meaning here.

He from the first swath proceeded
Thro' sweet degrees that this brief world affords,
To such as may the passive drugs of it
Freely command. Shaksp.

To DRUG, drûg. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To season with ingredients; commonly medicinal.

The surfeited grooms
Do mock their charge with snores.—I've drugg'd their possets,
That death and nature do contend about them. Shaksp.

2. To tincture with something offensive.

Oft they assay'd,
Hunger and thirst constraining; drugg'd as oft
With hatefulest disrelish, writh'd their jaws
With soot and cinders fill'd. Milton.

DRU'GGET, drûg'gît.[99] n. s. A slight kind of woollen stuff.

In druggets drest, of thirteen pence a yard,
See Philip's son amidst his Persian guard. Swift.

DRU'GGIST, drûg'gîst.[382] n. s. [from drug.] One who sells physical drugs.

Common nitre we bought at the druggist's. Boyle.

DRU'GSTER, drûg'stûr. n. s. [from drug.] One who sells physical simples.

Common oil of turpentine I bought at the drugster's. Boyle.

They set the clergy below their apothecaries,

the physician of the soul below the drugsters of the body. Atterbury.

DRU'ID, drů'id. n. s. [derio, oaks, and hud, incantation.] A priest and philosopher of the ancient Britons.

DRUM, drům. n. s. [tromme, Danish; drumme, Erse.]

1. An instrument of military musick, consisting of vellum strained over a broad hoop on each side, and beaten with sticks.

Let's march without the noise of threatening drums. Shaksp.

In drums, the closeness round about, that preserveth the sound from dispersing, maketh the noise come forth at the drum-hole far more loud and strong than if you should strike upon the like skin extended in the open air. Bacon.

Tears trickling down their breasts bedew the ground,
And drums and trumpets mix their mournful sound. Dryden.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangor shrill
Affrights the wives, and chills the virgin's blood. Philips.

2. The tympanum of the ear, or the membrane which perceives the vibration of the air.

To DRUM, drům. v. n.

1. To beat a drum; to beat a tune on a drum.

2. To beat with a pulsatory motion.

Now, heart,
Set ope thy sluices, send the vigorous blood
Through every active limb for my relief;
Then take thy rest within the quiet cell,
For thou shalt drum no more. Dryden.

To DRU'MBLE, drům'bl.[405] v. n. To drone; to be sluggish. Hanmer.

Take up these cloaths here quickly: where's the cowlstaff? Look, how you drumble! carry them to the landress in Datchet mead. Shaksp.

The under-jaw of the drumfish from Virginia. Woodward.

DRUMMA'JOR, drům-mà'jůr. n. s. [drum and major.] The chief drummer of a regiment.

Such company may chance to spoil the swearing;
And the drummajor's oaths of bulk unruly,
May dwindle to a feeble— Cleaveland.

DRU'MMAKER, drům'mà-kůr. n. s. [drum and maker.] He who deals in drums.

The drummaker uses it, and the cabinetmaker. Mortimer.

DRU'MMER, drům'můr. n. s. [from drum.] He whose office it is to beat the drum.

Drummer, strike up, and let us march away. Shaksp.

Here rows of drummers stand in martial file,
And with their vellum-thunder shake the pile. Gay.

DRU'MSTICK, drům'stik. n. s. [drum and stick.] The stick with which a drum is beaten.

DRUNK, drůnk. adj. [from drink.]

1. Intoxicated with strong liquor; inebriated.

This was the morn when issuing on the guard,
Drawn up in rank and file, they stood prepar'd
Of seeming arms to make a short assay;
Then hasten to be drunk, the business of the day. Dryden.

We generally conclude that man drunk, who takes pains to be thought sober. Spectator.

2. Drenched or saturated with moisture.

I will make mine arrows drunk with blood. Deut.

DRU'NKARD, drůnk'ůrd.[88] n. s. [from drunk.] One given to excessive use of strong liquors; one addicted to habitual ebriety.

Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion
Of my more fierce endeavour. I 've seen drunkards
Do more than this in sport. Shaks.

My bowels cannot hide her woes,
But, like a drunkard, I must vomit them. Shaksp.

God will not take the drunkard's excuse, that he has so long accustomed himself to intemperate drinking, that now he cannot leave it off. South.

DRU'NKEN, drůn'kn.[103] adj. [from drink.]

1. Intoxicated with liquor; inebriated.

O monstrous beast! how like a swine he lies!
Sirs, I will practice on this drunken man. Shaksp.

Drunken men imagine every thing turneth round: they imagine that things come upon them; they see not well things afar off; those things that they see near hand, they see out of their place, and sometimes they see things double. Bacon.

2. Given to habitual ebriety.

3. Saturated with moisture.

Then let the earth be drunken with our blood. Shaksp.

4. Done in a state of inebriation.

When your carters, or your waiting vassals,
Have done a drunken slaughter, and defac'd
The precious image of our dear Redeemer,
You straight are on your knees for pardon, pardon. Shaksp.

We should for honour take
The drunken quarrels of a rake. Swift.

DRU'NKENLY, drůn'kn-lė. adv. [from drunken.] In a drunken manner.

My blood already, like the pelican,
Hast thou tapt out, and drunkenly carous'd. Shaksp.

DRU'NKENNESS, drůn'kn-nės. n. s. [from drunken.]

1. Intoxication with strong liquor.

Every going off from our natural and common temper, and our usual severity of behaviour, is a degree of drunkenness. Taylor.

2. Habitual ebriety.

The Lacedæmonians trained up their children to hate drunkenness, by bringing a drunken man into their company. Watts.

3. Intoxication or inebriation of any kind; disorder of the faculties.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and therefore in its present workings not controllable by reason. Spenser.

DRY, drì. adj. [ðpuȝ, Sax.]

1. Arid; not wet; not moist.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a differing sound from the same pipe dry. Bacon.

When God said,
Be gather'd now, ye waters under heaven,
Into one place, and let dry land appear! Milton.

Of turbid elements the sport;
From clear to cloudy tost, from hot to cold,
And dry to moist. Thomson.

2. Not rainy.

A dry March and a dry May portend a wholesome summer, if there be a showering April between. Bacon

The weather, we agreed, was too dry for the season. Addison.

3. Not succulent; not juicy.

I will drain him dry as hay;
Sleep shall neither night nor day,
Hang upon his penthouse lid:
He shall live a man forbid. Shaksp.

4. Being without tears.

Dry mourning will decays more deadly bring,
As a north wind burns a too forward spring:
Give sorrow vent, and let the sluices go. Dryden.

5. Thirsty; a-thirst.

So dry he was for sway. Shaksp.

Void of a bulky charger near their lips,
With which in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furr'd tongues. Philips.

6. Jejune; barren; plain; unembellished; without pathos; without flowers.

As we should take care that our stile in writing be neither dry nor empty, we should look again it be not winding or wanton with far-fetched descriptions: either is a vice. Ben Jonson.

It remaineth to treat concerning ornaments within or without the fabrick; a piece not so dry as the mere contemplation of proportions: and therefore I hope therein somewhat to refresh both the reader and myself. Wotton.

That the fire burns by heat is an empty dry return to the question, and leaves us still ignorant. Glanville.

It is a dry fable, with little or nothing in it. L'Estrange.

Authority and friendship work upon some, dry and sober reason works upon others. L'Estrange.

To clear up this theory, I was willing to lay aside dry subtilties with which the schools are filled. Burnet.

These epistles will become less dry, and more susceptible of ornament. Pope.

7. Hard; severe. [drien, anciently to endure; dree, Scotish.]

Of two noblemen, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, was there never a flout or dry blow given? Bacon.

I rather hop'd I should no more
Hear from you o' th' gallanting score;
For hard dry bastings us'd to prove
The readiest remedies of love;
Next a dry diet. Hudibras.

To DRY dri. v. a.

1. To free from moisture; to arefy; to exsiccate.

The meat was well, if you were so contented.
—I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt and dried away. Shaksp.

Heat drieth bodies, that do easily expire, as parchment, leaves, roots, and clay; and so doth time arefy. Bacon.

Herbs and flowers, if they be dried in the shade, or dried in the hot sun a small time, keep best. Bacon.

The running streams are deep:
See, they have caught the father of the flock,
Who dries his fleece upon the neighbouring rock. Dryden.

2. To exhale moisture.

'Twas grief no more, or grief and rage were one
Within her soul: at last 'twas rage alone;
Which, burning upwards in succession, dries
The tears that stood considering in her eyes. Dryd.

3. To wipe away moisture.

Then with her vest the wound she wipes and dries. Denham.

See, at your blest returning,
Rage disappears;
The widow'd isle in mourning
Dries up her tears. Dryden.

4. To scorch with thirst.

Their honourable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst. Isaiah.

5. To drain; to exhaust.

Rash Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dried an immeasurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep,
Imprudent: him death's iron sleep opprest. Philips.

6. To DRY up. To deprive totally of moisture; to take all moisture away.

The water of the sea, which formerly covered it, was in time exhaled and dried up by the sun. Woodward.

To DRY, dri. v. n. To grow dry; to lose moisture; to be drained of its moisture.

DRY'ER, dri'ûr.[98] n. s. [from dry.] That which has the quality of absorbing moisture.

DRY'EYED, dri'ide. adj. [dry and eye.] Without tears; without weeping.

Sight so deform what heart of rock could long
Dryey'd behold? Adam could not, but wept. Milton.

DRY'LY, dri'lè. adv. [from dry.]

1. Without moisture.
2. Coldly; frigidly; without affection.

The archduke, conscious to himself how dryly the king had been used by his council, did strive to recover the king's affection. Bacon.

Wouldst thou to honour and preferments climb,
Be bold in mischief, dare some mighty crime,
Which dungeons, death, or banishment deserves;
For virtue is but dryly prais'd, and starves. Dryd.

3. Jejunely; barrenly; without ornament or embellishment.

Some dryly plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made. Pope.

DRY'NESS, dri'nês. n. s. [from dry.]

1. Want of moisture; siccity.

The Africans are conceived to be peculiarly scorched and torrified by the sun, by dryness of the soil, from want and defect of water. Brown.

Such was the discord which did first disperse
Form, order, beauty through the universe,
While dryness moisture, coldness heat resists,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists. Denham.

The marrow supplies an oil for the inunction of the bones and ligaments in the articulations, and particularly of the ligaments, preserving them from dryness and rigidity, and keeping them supple and flexible. Ray.

Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Why then must we fancy this impossible dryness, and then, upon that fictitious account, calumniate nature? Bentley.

2. Want of succulence.

If he fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him for't. Shaksp.

The difference of muscular flesh depends upon the hardness, tenderness, moisture, or dryness of the fibres. Arbuthnot.

3. Want of embellishment; want of pathos; jejuneness; barrenness.

Their new flowers and sweetness do as much corrupt as others dryness and squalor, if they chuse not carefully. Ben Jonson.

Be faithful where the author excels, and paraphrase where penury of fancy or dryness of expression ask it. Garth.

4. Want of sensibility in devotion; want of ardour; aridity.

It may be, that by this dryness of spirit, God intends to make us the more fervent and resigned in our direct and solemn devotions, by the perceiving of our weakness. Taylor.

DRY'NURSE, dri'nûrse. n. s. [dry and nurse.]

1. A woman who brings up and feeds a child without the breast.
2. One who takes care of another: with some contempt of the person taken care of.

Mrs. Quickly is his nurse, or his drynurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer. Shaksp.

To DRY'NURSE, dri'nûrse. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed without the breast.

As Romulus a wolf did rear,
So he was drynurs'd by a bear. Hudibras.

DRY'SHOD, dri'shôd. adj. [dry and shod.] Without wet feet; without treading above the shoes in the water.

He had embarked us in such disadvantage, as we could not return dryshod. Sidney.

Dryshod to pass, she parts the floods in tway;
And eke huge mountains from their native seat,
She would command themselves to bear away.
Fairy Queen.

Has honour's fountain then suck'd back the stream?
He has; and booting boys may dryshod pass,
And gather pebbles from the naked ford. Dryden.

DU'AL, dû'âl. adj. [dualis, Latin.] Expressing the number two.

Modern languages have only one variation, and so the Latin; but the Greek and Hebrew have one to signify two, and another to signify more than two; under one variation the noun is said to be of the dual number, and under the other, of the plural. Clarke's Lat. Gram.

To DUB, dûb. v. a. [ꝺubban zo ꝑiꝺepe, Sax. addubba till riddara, Islandick, to dub a knight. Addubba, in its primary sense, signifies to strike, knights being made by a blow with the sword.]

1. To make a man a knight.

Knight, knight, good mother! Basilisco like.
What! I am dubb'd, I have it on my shoulder. Shaksp.

The robes which the kings then allowed to each knight, when he was dubbed, of green, or burnet, as they spake in that age, appeareth upon record. Camden.

The king stood up under his cloth of state, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward.

2. To confer any kind of dignity or new character.

The jealous o'erworn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shaksp.

He
Gave thee no instance why thou should'st do treason,
Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor. Shaksp.

Women commence by Cupid's dart,
As a king hunting dubs a hart. Cleaveland.

A plain gentleman, of an ancient family, is of better quality than a new knight, though the reason of his dubbing was meritorious. Collier.

O poet! thou hadst been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
That did but blaze, and rove, and die. Prior.

These demoniacks let me dub,
With the name of legion club. Swift.

A man of wealth is dubb'd a man of worth:
Venus shall give him form, and Anstis birth. Pope.

DUB, dûb. n. s. [from the verb.] A blow; a knock.

As skilful coopers hoop their tubs
With Lydian and with Phrygian dubs. Hudibras.

DUBIO'SITY, dû-bè-ôs'è tè. n. s. [from dubious.] A thing doubtful. Not used.

Men often swallow falsities for truths, dubiosities for certainties, feasibilities for possibilities, and things impossible for possible. Brown.

DU'BIOUS, dû'bè-ûs.[542] adj. [dubius, Lat.]

1. Doubting; not settled in an opinion.
2. Uncertain; that of which the truth is not fully known.

DUBITA'TION, dû-bè-tâ'shûn. n. s. [dubitatio, Lat.] The act of doubting; doubt.

Many of the ancients denied the antipodes; but the experience of our enlarged navigation can now assert them beyond all dubitation. Brown.

Dubitation may be called a negative perception; that is, when I perceive that what I see is not what I would see. Grew.

DU'CAL, dû'kâl. adj. [from duke.] Pertaining to a duke: as, a ducal coronet.

DU'CAT, dûk'ît.[90] n. s. [from duke.] A coin struck by dukes; in silver, valued at about four shillings and sixpence; in gold, at nine shillings and sixpence.

I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of full three thousand ducats. Shaksp.

There was one who died in debt; it was reported, where his creditors were, that he was dead: one said, he hath carried five hundred ducats of mine into the other world. Bacon.

DUCK, dûk. n. s. [anas; ducken, to dip, Dutch.]

1. A waterfowl, both wild and tame.

The ducks, that heard the proclamation cried,
And fear'd a prosecution might betide,
Full twenty mile from town their voyage take
Obscure in rushes of the liquid lake. Dryden.

Grubs, if you find your land subject to, turn ducks into it. Mortimer.

2. A word of endearment, or fondness.

Will you buy any tape or lace for your cap,
My dainty duck, my dear-a? Shaksp.

3. A declination of the head: so called from the frequent action of a duck in the water.

Back, shepherds, back; enough your play
Till next sunshine holyday:
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes and such court guise
As Mercury did first devise. Milton.

4. A stone thrown obliquely on the water, so as to strike it and rebound.

Neither cross and pile, nor ducks and drakes, are quite so ancient as handy-dandy. Arb. and Pope.

To DUCK, dûk. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dive under water as a duck.

The varlet saw, when to the flood he came,
How without stop or stay he fiercely leapt;
And deep himself be ducked in the same,
That in the lake his lofty crest was steept. F. Queen.

Let the labouring bark climb hills of seas
Olympus high, and duck again as low
As hell's from heaven. Shaksp.

Thou art wickedly devout;
In Tiber ducking thrice by break of day. Dryden.

2. To drop down the head, as a duck.

As some raw youth in country bred,
When at a skirmish first he hears
The bullets whistling round his ears,
Will duck his head, aside will start,
And feel a trembling at his heart. Swift.

3. To bow low; to cringe. In Scotish duyk, or juyk, to make obeisance, is still used.

I cannot flatter and look fair,
Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
Duck with French nods, and apish courtesy. Shaksp.
The learned pate
Ducks to the golden fool. Shaksp.

To DUCK, dŭk. v. a. To put under water.

DUE, dū. adj. The part. pass. of owe. [dû, French.]
1. Owed; that any one has a right to demand in consequence of a compact, or for any other reason.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation and gracing, where causes are well handled and fair pleaded. There is likewise due to the publick a civil reprehension of advocates, where there appeareth cunning, gross neglect, or slight information. Bacon.
Mirth and cheerfulness are but the due reward of innocency of life. More.
A present blessing upon our fasts is neither originally due from God's justice, nor becomes due to us from his veracity. Smalridge.
There is a respect due to mankind, which should incline even the wisest of men to follow innocent customs. Watts.

2. Proper; fit; appropriate.

Opportunity may be taken to excite, in persons attending on those solemnities, a due sense of the vanity of earthly satisfactions. Atterbury.

3. Exact; without deviation.

You might see him come towards me beating the ground in so due time, as no dancer can observe better measure. Sidney.
And Eve within, due at her hour, prepar'd
For dinner savoury fruits. Milton.

4. Consequent to; occasioned or effected by Proper, but not usual.

The motion of the oily drops may be in part due to some partial solution made by the vinous spirit, which may tumble them to and fro. Boyle.

DUE, dū. adv. [from the adjective.] Exactly; directly; duly. The course is due east, or due west.

Like the Pontick sea,
Whose icy current, and compulsive course,
Ne'er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on
To the Propontick and the Hellespont. Shaksp.

DUE, dū. n. s. [from the adjective.]
1. That which belongs to one; that which may be justly claimed.

My due from thee is this imperial crown,
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives itself to me. Shaksp.
The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court. Shaksp.
Thou better know'st
Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude:
Thy half o' th' kingdom thou hast not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd. Shaksp.
The due of honour in no point omit. Shaksp.
I take this garland, not as given by you,
But as my merit and my beauty's due. Dryden.
No popular assembly ever knew, or proposed, or declared, what share of power was their due. Swift.

2. Right; just title.

The key of this infernal pit by due,
And by command of heaven's all powerful king,
I keep. Milton.

3. Whatever custom or law requires to be done.

Befriend
Us, thy vow'd priests, till outmost end
Of all thy dues be done, and none left out. Milton.
They pay the dead his annual dues. Dryden.

4. Custom; tribute; exactions; legal or customary perquisites.

In respect to the exorbitant dues that are paid at most other ports, this deservedly retains the name of free. Addison.

To DUE, dū. v. a. [from the noun.] To pay as due; perhaps for endow. It is perhaps only in this single passage.

This is the latest glory of their praise,
That I thy enemy due thee withal. Shaksp.

DU'EL, dū'ĭl. n. s. [duellum, Latin.] A combat between two; a single fight.

In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet, if it be tried by the gross, go on the other side. Bacon.
Dream not of your fight
As of a duel, or the local wounds
Of head or heel. Milton.
'Twas I that wrong'd you; you my life have sought:
No duel ever was more justly fought. Waller.

To DU'EL, dū'ĭl. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight a single combat.

He must at length, poor man! die dully at home, when here he might so fashionably and genteelly have been duelled or fluxed into another world. South.
The challenging and fighting with a man is called duelling. Locke.

To DU'EL, dū'ĭl. v. a. To attack or fight with singly.

Who single
Duell'd their armies rank'd in proud array,
Himself an army, now unequal match
To save himself against a coward arm'd,
At one spear's length. Milton.

DU'ELLER, dū'ĭl-ŭr.[99] n. s. [from duel.] A single combatant.

They perhaps begin as single duellers, but then they soon get their troops about them. Decay of Piety.

DU'ELLIST, dū'ĭl-lĭst. n. s. [from duel.]
1. A single combatant.

If the king ends the differences, the case will fall out no worse than when two duellists enter the field, where the worsted party hath his sword again, without further hurt. Suckling.

Henceforth let poets, ere allowed to write,
Be search'd like duellists before they fight. Dryden.

2. One who professes to study the rules of honour.

His bought arms Mung not lik'd, for his first day
Of bearing them in field, he threw 'em away;
And hath no honour lost, our duellists say.
Ben Jonson.

DUE'LLO, dů-ěl'lō. n. s. [Italian.] The duel; the rule of dueling.

The gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you: he cannot by the duello avoid it. Shaksp.

DUE'NNA, dů-ěn'nâ. n.s. [Spanish.] An old woman kept to guard a younger.

I felt the ardour of my passion increase as the season advanced, till in the month of July I could no longer contain; I bribed her duenna, was admitted to the bath, saw her undressed, and the wonder displayed. Arbuthnot on Pope.

DUG, důg. n. s. [dreggia, to give suck, Islandick.]

1. A pap; a nipple; a teat: spoken of beasts, or in malice or contempt of human beings.

A thousand young ones, which she daily fed
Suckling upon her poisonous dugs; each one
Of sundry shape, yet all ill-favoured. F. Queen.

They are first fed and nourished with the milk of a strange dug. Raleigh.

Then shines the goat, whose brutish dugs supplied
The infant Jove, and nurst his growing pride.
Creech.

2. It seems to have been used formerly of the breast, without reproach.

It was a faithless squire that was the source
Of all my sorrow, and of these sad tears,
With whom, from tender dug of common nourse,
At once I was up brought. F. Queen.

As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe,
Dying with mother's dug between its lips. Shaksp.

DUG, důg. The pret. and part. pass. of dig.

They had often found medals, and pipes of lead, as they dug among the rubbish. Addison.

The petty rebel, dulbrain'd Buckingham. Shaksp.

DU'LCET, důl'sět.[99] adj. [dulcis, Lat.]

1. Sweet to the taste; luscious:

From sweet kernels press'd,
She tempers dulcet creams; nor these to hold
Wants she fit vessels pure. Milton.

2. Sweet to the ear; harmonious; melodious.

I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid, on a dolphin's back,
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song. Shaksp.

A fabric huge
Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies, and voices sweet. Milton.

DULCIFICA'TION, důl-sė-fė-kā'shůn. n. s. [from dulcify.] The act of sweetening; the act of freeing from acidity, saltness, or acrimony.

In colcothar, the exactest calcination, followed by an exquisite dulcification, does not reduce the remaining body into elementary earth: for after the salt of vitriol, if the calcination have been too faint, is drawn out of the colcothar, the residue is not earth, but a mixt body, rich in medical virtues. Boyle.

To DU'LCIFY, důl'sė-fī.[183] v. a. [dulcifier, Fr.] To sweeten; to set free from acidity, saltness, or acrimony of any kind.

A decoction of wild gourd, or colocynthis, though somewhat qualified, will not from every hand be dulcified into aliment, by an addition of flour or meal. Brown.

I dressed him with a pledgit, dipt in a dulcified tincture of vitriol. Wiseman.

Spirit of wine dulcifies spirit of salt; nitre or vitriol have other bad effects. Arbuthnot.

What! mak'st thou me a dullard in this act?
Wilt thou not speak to me? Shaksp.

Thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potential spurs
To make thee seek it. Shaksp.

DU'LLY, důl'lė. adv. [from dull.]

1. Stupidly; doltishly.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully, literally, and meanly; but it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful. Dryden.

2. Slowly; sluggishly.

The air if it be moist, doth in a degree quench the flame, and howsoever maketh it burn more dully. Bacon.

3. Not vigorously; not gayly; not brightly; not keenly.

Not that I think those pantomimes,
Who vary action with the times,
Are less ingenious in their art
Than those who dully act one part. Hudibras.

DU'LNESS, dŭl'nés. n. s. [from dull.]

1. Stupidity; weakness of intellect; indocility; slowness of apprehension.

Ever since they firmly have retained,
And duly well observed his beheast. Spenser.

My prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than vanities; yet prayers and wishes
Are all I can return. Shaksp.

In the body, when the principal parts, as the heart and liver, do their offices, and all the inferiour smaller vessels act orderly and duly, there arises a sweet enjoyment upon the whole, which we call health. South.

If attention be duly engaged to those reflections, they cannot fail of influences. Rogers.

2. Regularly; exactly.

Seldom at church, 'twas such a busy life;
But duly sent his family and wife. Pope.

DUMB, dŭm.[347] adj. [זם, he was silent; dumbs, Gothick; ᵹumbe, Saxon; dum, Danish; dom, Dutch, dull.]

1. Mute; incapable of speech.

It hath pleased himself sometime to unloose the very tongues even of dumb creatures, and to teach them to plead in their own defence, lest the cruelty of man should persist to afflict them. Hooker.

They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Star'd each on other. Shaksp.

Some positive terms signify a negative idea: blind implies a privation of sight, dumb a denial of speech. Watts's Logick.

2. Deprived of speech.

They sung no more, or only sung his fame;
Struck dumb, they all admir'd the godlike man. Dryden.

3. Mute; not using words.

He is a proper man's picture; but, alas! who can converse with a dumb show. Shaksp.

His gentle dumb expression turn'd at length
The eye of Eve to mark his play. Milton.

Her humble gestures made the residue plain,
Dumb eloquence persuading more than speech. Roscommon.

For he who covets gain in such excess
Does by dumb signs himself as much express,
As if in words at length he show'd his mind. Dryd.

Nothing is more common than for lovers to complain, relent, languish, despair, and die in dumb show. Addison.

4. Silent; refusing to speak.

The good old seer withstood
Th' intended treason, and was dumb to blood;
Till tir'd with endless clamours and pursuit
Of Ithacus, he stood no longer mute. Dryden.

DU'MBLY, dŭm'lé. adv. [from dumb.] Mutely; silently; without words.

DU'MBNESS, dŭm'nés. n. s. [from dumb.]

1. Incapacity to speak.

2. Omission of speech; muteness.

There was speech in their dumbness, language in their very gesture, they looked as they had heard of a world ransomed, or one destroyed. Shaksp.

To th' dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret. Shaksp.

3. Refusal to speak; silence.

'Tis love, said she; and then my downcast eyes,
And guilty dumbness witness'd my surprise. Dryd.

To DU'MFOUND, dŭm'fŏŭnd. v. a. [from dumb.] To confute; to strike dumb. A low phrase.

They had like to have dumfounded the justice, but his clerk came in to his assistance. Spectator.

DUMP, dŭmp. n. s. [from dom, stupid, Dutch.]

1. Sorrow; melancholy; sadness.

Sing no more ditties, sing no mo
Of dumps so dull and heavy;
The frauds of men were ever so,
Since summer first was leafy. Shaksp.

Visit by night your lady's chamber window
With some sweet concert; to their instruments
Tune a deploring dump: the night's dead silence
Will well become such sweet complaining grievance. Shaksp.

Funerals with stately pomp
March slowly on in solemn dump. Hudibras.

The squire who fought on bloody stumps.
By future bards bewail'd in doleful dumps. Gay.

2. Absence of mind; reverie. Locke uses dumps singularly.

This shame dumps cause to well-bred people, when it carries them away from the company. Locke.

DU'MPISH, dŭmp'ish. adj. [from dump.] Sad; melancholy; sorrowful.

New year, forth looking out of Janus' gate,
Doth seem to promise hope of new delight;
And bidding th' old adieu, his passed date
Bids all old thoughts to die in dumpish spight. Spenser.

The life which I live at this age is not a dead, dumpish, and sour life; but chearful, lively and pleasant. Herbert.

DU'MPLING, dŭmp'ling. n. s. [from dump, heaviness.] A sort of pudding.

Pudding and dumplings burn to pot. Dryden.

DUN, dŭn. adj. [ᵹun, Saxon.]

1. A colour partaking of brown and black.

We are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black, that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown. Newton.

2. Dark; gloomy.

Come, thick night!
And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell. Shaksp.

He then survey'd
Hell and the gulph between, and Satan there
Coasting the wall of heaven on this side,
In the dun air sublime. Milton.

To DUN, dŭn. v. a. [ᵹunan, Sax. to clamour.] To claim a debt with vehemence and importunity.

Borrow of thy back, and borrow of thy belly, they'll never ask thee again. I shall be dunning thee every day. Bacon.

When thou dunn'st their parents, seldom they,
Without a suit before the tribune, pay. Dryden.

I remember what she won:
And hath she sent so soon to dun? Swift.

DUN, dŭn. n. s. [from the verb.] A clamorous, importunate, troublesome creditor.

Thus, while my joyless minutes tedious flow,
With looks demure, and silent pace, a dun,
Horrible monster! hated by gods and men,
To my aerial citadel ascends. Philips.

It grieves my heart to be pulled by the sleeve by some rascally dun—Sir, remember my bill. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

DUNCE, dŭnse. n. s. [A word of uncertain etymology; perhaps from dom, Dutch, stupid.] A dullard; a dolt; a thick-skull; a stupid, indocile animal.

Dunce at the best, in streets but scarce allow'd
To tickle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd. Dryden.

Was Epiphanius so great a dunce to imagine a thing, indifferent in itself, should be directly opposite to the law of God? Stillingfleet.

I never knew this town without dunces of figure, who had credit enough to give rise to some new word. Swift.

DUNG, dŭng. n. s. [ᵹinᵹ, Saxon.] The excrement of animals used to fatten ground.

For dung, all excrements are the refuse and putrefactions of nourishment. Bacon.

I judge the likeliest way to be, the perforation of the body of the tree in several places, one above the other; and the filling of the holes with dung, mingled with the medicine; and the watering of those lumps of dung with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dunged water, once in three or four days. Bacon.

For when from herbs the pure part must be won
From gross by 'stilling, this is better done
By despis'd dung than by the fire or sun. Donne.

He soon would learn to think like me,
And bless his ravish'd eyes to see
Such order from confusion sprung,
Such gaudy tulips rais'd from dung. Swift.

To DUNG, dŭng. v. a. [from the noun.] To manure with dung.

It was received of old, that dunging of grounds when the west wind bloweth, and in the decrease of the moon, doth greatly help. Bacon.

There, as his dream foretold, a cart he found,
That carried compost forth to dung the ground. Dryden.

DU'NGEON, dŭn'jŭn.[259] n. s. [from donjon, the tower in which prisoners were kept, whence all prisons eminently strong were in time called dungeons.] A close prison: generally spoke of a prison dark or subterraneous.

Then up he took the slumber'd senseless corse,
And, ere he could out of his swoon awake,
Him to his castle brought with hasty force,
And in a dungeon deep him threw without remorse. Spenser.

We know not that the king of heav'n hath doom'd
This place our dungeon; not our safe retreat
Beyond his potent arm. Milton.

Now from the north
Of Norumbeque, and the Samoed shore,
Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, come stormy gust and flaw. Milton.

By imagination, a man in a dungeon is capable of entertaining himself with scenes and landscapes, more beautiful than any that can be found in the whole compass of nature. Addison.

DU'NGFORK, dŭng'fŏrk. n. s. [dung and fork.] A fork to toss out dung from stables.

Dungforks and paddles are common every where. Mortimer.

DU'NGHIL, dŭng'hĭl. n. s. [dung and hill.]

1. A heap or accumulation of dung.

I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth; for the which his animals on his dunghils are as much bound to him as I. Shaksp.

Two cocks fought a duel for the mastery of a dunghil. L'Estrange.

Never enter into a league of friendship with an ingrateful person; that is, plant not thy friendship upon a dunghil: it is too noble a plant for so base a soil. South.

The dunghil having raised a huge mushroom of short duration, is now spread to enrich other men's land. Swift.

2. Any mean or vile abode.

Perhaps a thousand other worlds that lie
Remote from us, and latent in the sky,
Are lighten'd by his beams, and kindly nurst,
Of which our earthly dunghil is the worst. Dryden.

3. Any situation of meanness.

The poor he raiseth from the dust,
Ev'n from the dunghil lifts the just. Sandys.

4. A term of reproach for a man meanly born.

Out, dunghil! dar'st thou brave a nobleman? Shaksp.

DU'NGHIL, dŭng'hĭl.[406] adj. Sprung from the dunghil; mean; low; base; vile; worthless.

His dunghil thoughts, which do themselves enure
To dirty dross, no higher dare aspire. Spenser.

DU'NGY, dŭng'ė. adj. [from dung.] Full of dung; mean; vile; base; low; odious; worthless.

We need no grave to bury honesty;
There's not a grain of it, the face to sweeten
Of the whole dungy earth. Shaksp.

DU'NGYARD, dŭng'yârd. n. s. [dung and yard.] The place of the dunghil.

Any manner of vegetables cast into the dungyard. Mortimer.

DU'NNER, dŭn'nŭr.[98] n. s. [from dun.] One employed in soliciting petty debts.

They are ever talking of new silks, and serve the owners in getting them customers, as their common dunners do in making them pay. Spectator.

DUODE'CUPLE, dû ò-dĕk'kû-pl. adj. [duo and decuplus, Latin.] Consisting of twelves.

Grisepsius, a learned Polander, endeavours to establish the duodecuple proportion among the Jews, by comparing some passages of scripture together. Arbuthnot.

DUPE, dûpe. n. s. [dupe, Fr. from duppe, a foolish bird, easily caught.] A credulous man; a man easily tricked. A modern word hardly established.

An usurping populace is its own dupe, a mere underworker, and a purchaser in trust for some single tyrant. Swift.

First slave to words, then vassal to a name,
Then dupe to party; child and man the same. Dunciad.

To DUPE, dûpe. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick; to cheat.

The throne a bigot keep, a genius quit;
Faithless through piety, and dup'd through wit. Pope.

DU'PLE, dû'pl. adj. [duplus, Lat.] Double; one repeated.

To DU'PLICATE, dû'plė-kâte.[91] v. a. [duplico, Lat.]

1. To double; to enlarge by the repetition of the first number or quantity.

And some alterations in the brain duplicate that which is but a single object to our undistempered sentiments. Glanville.

2. To fold together.

DU'PLICATE, dû'plė-kâte.[91] adj. [from the verb.]

Duplicate proportion is the proportion of squares. Thus, in a rank of geometrical proportions, the first term to the third is said to be in a duplicate ratio of the first to the second, or as its square is to the square of the second: so in 2, 4, 8, 16, the ratio of 2 to 8 is a duplicate of that of 2 to 4, or as the square of 2 to the square of 4. Phillips. Harris. Bailey.

It has been found, that the attraction is almost reciprocally in a duplicate proportion of the distance of the middle of the drop from the concourse of the glasses, viz. reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the spreading of the drop, and its touching each glass in a larger surface; and again reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the attractions growing stronger within the same quantity of attracting surface. Newton's Opticks.

DU'PLICATE, dû'plė-kâte.[91] n. s. Another correspondent to the first; a second thing of the same kind, as a transcript of a paper.

Nothing is more needful for perfecting the natural history of bodies, than the subjecting them to the fire; to which end I have reserved duplicates of the most considerable. Woodward.

DUPLICA'TION, dû-plė-kâ'shŭn. n. s. [from duplicate.]

1. The act of doubling.

What great pains hath been taken concerning the quadrature of a circle, and the duplication of a cube, and some other mathematical problems. Hale.

2. The act of folding together.

3. A fold; a doubling.

The peritonæum is a strong membrane, every where double; in the duplications of which all the viscera of the abdomen are hid. Wiseman.

DU'PLICATURE, dû'plė-kâ-tûre. n. s. [from duplicate.] A fold; any thing doubled.

The lympheducts, either dilacerated or obstructed, exonerate themselves into the foldings, or between the duplicatures of the membranes. Ray.

DUPLI'CITY, dû-plĭs'ė-tė. n. s. [duplicis, Lat.]

1. Doubleness; the number of two.

This duplicity was ill contrived to place one head at both extremes, and had been more tolerable to have set three or four at once. Brown.

Do not affect duplicities nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts, in your division of things. Watts.

2. Deceit; doubleness of heart or of tongue.

DURABI'LITY, dû-râ-bĭl'ė-tė. n. s. [durabilis, Lat.] The power of lasting; continuance; endurance.

Stones, though in dignity of nature inferior unto plants, yet exceed them in firmness of strength, or durability of being. Hooker.

Our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Raleigh.

DU'RABLE, dû'râ-bl.[405] adj. [durabilis, Lat.]

1. Lasting; having the quality of long continuance.

The bones of his body we may compare to the hard rocks and stones, and therefore strong and durable. Raleigh.

With pins of adamant,
And chains, they made all fast: too fast they made,
And durable! Milton

The glories of her majesty's reign ought to be recorded in words more durable than brass, and such as our posterity may read a thousand years hence. Swift.

2. Having successive existence.

Time, though in eternity, applied
To motion, measures all things durable
By present, past, and future. Milton.

DU'RABLENESS, dû'râ-bl-nĕs. n. s. [from durable.] Power of lasting; continuance.

The different consistence and durableness of the strata whereof they consist, are more or less. Woodward.

A bad poet, if he cannot become immortal by the goodness of his verse, may by the durableness of the metal that supports it. Addison.

DU'RABLY, dû'râ-blė. adv. [from durable.] In a lasting manner.

There indeed he found his fame flourishing, his monuments ingraved in marble, and yet more durably in men's memories. Sidney.

DU'RANCE, dû'rânse. n. s. [from duresse, law Fr.]

1. Imprisonment; the custody or power of a jailer; a prison.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,
Is in base durance and contagious prison;
Haul'd thither by mechanick dirty hands Shaksp.

A poor, innocent, forlorn stranger, languishing in durance, upon the false accusations of a lying, insolent, whorish woman. South.

There's neither iron bar nor gate,
Portcullis, chain, nor bolt, nor grate;
And yet men durance there abide,
In dungeons scarce three inches wide. Hudibras.

Notwithstanding the warning and example before me, I commit myself to lasting durance. Congreve.

2. Endurance; continuance; duration. A doubtful word.

Sick nature at that instant trembled round,
And mother earth sigh'd as she felt the wound:
Of how short durance was this new made state!
How far more mighty than heav'n's love, hell's hate. Dryden.

DURA'TION, dû-râ'shŭn. n. s. [duratio, Lat.]

1. A sort of distance or length, the idea whereof we get, not from the permanent parts of space, but from the fleeting and perpetually perishing parts of succession. Locke.

2. Power of continuance.

Duration is a circumstance so essential to happiness, that if we conceived it possible for the joys of heaven itself to pass from us in an instant, we should find ourselves not much concerned for the attainment of them. Rogers.

3. Length of continuance.

Aristotle, by greatness of action, does not only mean it should be great in its nature, but also in its duration; that it should have a due length in it. Addison.

To DURE, dûre. v. n. [duro, Latin.] To last; to continue; to endure.

The delights and pleasures of the world are most pleasing while they dure. Raleigh.

DU'REFUL, dûre'fûl. adj. [from dure and full.] Lasting; of long continuance; durable. Not in use.

The dureful oak, whose sap is not yet dried,
Is long ere it conceive the kindling fire;
But when it once doth burn, it doth divide
Great heat, and makes his flames to heav'n aspire. Spenser.

DU'RELESS, dûre'lĕs. adj. [from dure.] Without continuance; fading; transitory; short. Not in use.

Yet were that aptitude natural, more inclinable to follow and embrace the false and dureless pleasures of this stage-play world, than to become the shadow of God. Raleigh.

DU'RESSE, dû'rĕs. n. s. [French; hardship, severity.]

1. Imprisonment; constraint; confinement.

2. In law.

A plea used, by way of exception, by him who, being cast into prison at a man's suit, or otherwise by threats, beating, &c. hardly used, seals any bond to him during his restraint. This the law holds as invalid, and supposes to be constrained. Cowell.

DU'RING, dû'ring. prep. [This word is rather a participle from dure: as, during life, durante vita, life continuing; during my pleasure, my pleasure continuing the same.] For the time of the continuance of; while any thing lasts.

If during his childhood he be constantly and rigorously kept from drinking cold liquor whilst he is hot, forbearance grows into a habit. Locke.

DU'RITY, dû'rê-tê. n. s. [dureté, Fr. durus, Lat.] Hardness; firmness.

Ancients did burn fragments of marble, which in time became marble again, at least of indissoluble durity, as appeareth in the standing theatres. Wotton.

Irradiancy or sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this; for it cometh short of their compactness and durity. Brown.

DURST, dûrst. The preterit of dare.

The christians durst have no images of the Deity, because they would rather die than defile themselves with such an impiety. Stillingfleet.

DUSK, dûsk. adj. [duyster, Dut.]

1. Tending to darkness. See DUSKY.
2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured.

The hills, to their supply,
Vapour and exhalation, dusk and moist,
Sent up amain. Milton.

DUSK, dûsk. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Tendency to darkness; incipient obscurity.

I will wait on you in the dusk of the evening, with my show upon my back. Spectator.

2. Darkness of colour; tendency to blackness.

Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin. Dryden.

To DUSK, dûsk. v. a. [from the noun.] To make duskish. Dict.

To DUSK, dûsk. v. n. To grow dark; to begin to lose light or brightness; to have lustre diminished. Dict.

DU'SKILY, dûsk'ê-lê. adv. [from dusky.] With a tendency to darkness or blackness.

DU'SKISH, dûsk'îsh. adj. [from dusk.]

1. Inclining to darkness; tending to obscurity.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw
Huge flames, that dimmed all the heaven's light,
Enroll'd in duskish smoke, and brimstone blue. Spenser.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured.

Sight is not contented with sudden departments from one extreme to another; therefore rather a duskish tincture than an absolute black. Wotton.

DU'SKISHLY, dûsk'ish-lê. adv. [from duskish.] Cloudily; darkly.

The sawdust burned fair, till part of the candle consumed; the dust gathering about the snast, made the snast to burn duskishly. Bacon.

DU'SKY, dûsk'ê. adj. [from dusk; duyster, Dut.]

1. Tending to darkness; obscure; not luminous.

Here lies the dusky torch of Mortimer,
Choak'd with ambition of the meaner sort. Shaksp.
There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away. Dryd.
Through the plains, of one continual day,
Six shining months pursue their even way;
And six succeeding urge their dusky flight,
Obscur'd with vapours and o'erwhelm'd in night. Prior.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured; not clear; not bright.

They did plot
The means that dusky Dis my daughter got. Shaksp.
It is not green, but of a dusky brown colour. Bacon.
When Jove in dusky clouds involves the skies,
And the faint crescent shoots by fits before their eyes. Dryden.
The surface is of a dusky yellow colour. Woodward.
By mixing such powders, we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black; that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown. Newton's Opticks.

3. Gloomy; sad; intellectually clouded.

While he continues in life, this dusky scene of horrour, this melancholy prospect of final perdition, will frequently occur to his fancy. Bentley.
Umbriel, a dusky melancholy sprite,
As ever sullied the fair face of light,
Down to the central earth, his proper scene,
Repairs to search the gloomy cave of spleen. Pope.

DUST, dûst. n. s. [ᵭuꝛt, Saxon; dúst, Erse.]

1. Earth or other matter reduced to small particles.

The dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heav'n,
Rais'd by your populous troops. Shakspeare.
Dust helpeth the fruitfulness of trees, insomuch as they cast dust upon them: that powdering, when a shower cometh, maketh a soiling to the tree, being earth and water finely laid on. Bacon.

2. The grave; the state of dissolution.

The sceptre, learning, physick, must
All follow this, and come to dust. Shakspeare.
Thou
Out of the ground wast taken, know thy birth,
For dust thou art, and shalt to dust return. Milton.

3. A mean and dejected state.

God raiseth up the poor out of the dust, to set them among princes. 1 Samuel.

To DUST, dûst. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from dust.
2. To sprinkle with dust.

DU'STMAN, dûst'mân.[88] n. s. [dust and man.] One whose employment is to carry away the dust.

The dustman's cart offends thy clothes and eyes,
When through the street a cloud of ashes flies. Gay.

DU'STY, dûs'tê. adj. [from dust.]

1. Filled with dust; clouded with dust.

All our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shakspeare.
Arms and the dusty fields I less admire,
And soften strangely in some new desire. Dryden.

2. Covered or scattered with dust.

Even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace stone, looks gay. Thomson.

DU'TCHESS, dûtsh'ês. n. s. [duchesse, Fr.]

1. The lady of a duke.

The duke of Cornwal, and Regan his dutchess, will be here. Shakspeare.
The duke was to command the army, and the dutchess, by the favour she possessed, to be near her majesty. Swift.
The gen'rous god who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens mines,
Kept dross for dutchesses, the world shall know it,
To you gave sense, good humour, and a poet. Pope.

2. A lady who has the sovereignty of a dukedom.

DU'TCHY, dûtsh'ê. n. s. [duché, Fr.] A territory which gives title to a duke, or has a duke for its sovereign.

Different states border on it; the kingdom of France, the dutchy of Savoy, and the canton of Berne. Addison.
France might have swallowed up his whole dutchy. Swift.

DU'TCHY-COURT, dûtsh'ê-kôrt. n. s. A court wherein all matters appertaining to the dutchy of Lancaster are decided by the decree of the chancellor of that court. Cowell.

DU'TEOUS, dû'tê-ûs, or dû'tshê-ûs.[263 204] adj. [from duty.]

1. Obedient; obsequious; respectful to those who have natural or legal authority.

Great Aurengzebe did duteous care express,
And durst not push too far his great success. Dryden.
A female softness, with a manly mind;
A duteous daughter, and a sister kind;
In sickness patient, and in death resign'd. Dryden.
Who taught the bee with winds and rains to strive,
To bring her burden to the certain hive;
And through the liquid fields again to pass
Duteous, and hark'ning to the sounding brass? Prior.

2. Obsequious; obedient to good or bad purposes: with to.

I know thee well; a serviceable villain!
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress,
As badness would desire. Shakspeare.
Every beast, more duteous at her call,
Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd. Milton.

3. Enjoined by duty; enforced by the relation of one to another. This sense is not now used.

With mine own tongue deny my sacred right,
With mine own breath release all duteous ties. Shakspeare.

DU'TIFUL, dû'tê-fûl. adj. [duty and full.]

1. Obedient; submissive to natural or legal superiours; reverent.

She died in an extreme old age, without pain, under the care of the most dutiful son that I have ever known or heard of. Swift to Pope.

2. Expressive of respect; giving token of reverence; respectful; reverential.

There would she kiss the ground, and thank the trees, bless the air, and do dutiful reverence to every thing she thought did accompany her at their first meeting. Sidney.

DU'TIFULLY, dû'tê-fûl-ê. adv. [from dutiful.]

1. Obediently; submissively.
2. Reverently; respectfully.

His daughter Philoclea he found at that time dutifully watching by her mother, and Miso curiously watching her. Sidney.
He with joyful, nimble wing,
Flew dutifully back again,
And made an humble chaplet for the king. Swift.

DU'TIFULNESS, dû'tê-fûl-nês. n. s. [from dutiful.]

1. Obedience; submission to just authority.

Piety, or dutifulness to parents, was a most popular virtue among the Romans. Dryden.

2. Reverence; respect.

It is a strange kind of civility, and an evil dutifulness in friends and relatives, to suffer him to perish without reproof or medicine, rather than to seem unmannerly to a great sinner. Taylor.

DU'TY, dû'tê. n. s. [from due.]

1. That to which a man is by any natural or legal obligation bound.

When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do. Luke.

The pain children feel from any necessity of nature, it is the duty of parents to relieve. Locke.

2. Acts or forbearances required by religion or morality. In this sense it has a plural.

Good my lord,
You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I
Return those duties back, as are right fit;
Obey you, love you, and most honour you. Shaksp.

All our duty is set down in our prayers, because in all our duty we beg the Divine assistance, and remember that you are bound to do all those duties, for the doing of which you have prayed for the Divine assistance. Taylor.

3. Obedience or submission due to parents, governours, or superiours; loyalty; piety to parents.

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flatt'ry bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakspeare.

God's party will appear small, and the king's not greater; it being not probable, that those should have sense of duty to him that had none to God. Decay of Piety.

4. Act of reverence or respect.

They both atone,
Did duty to their lady as became. Fairy Queen.

5. The business of a soldier on guard.

The regiment did duty there punctually. Clarend.

Otho, as often as Galba supped with him, used to give every soldier upon duty an aureus. Arbuthnot.

6. The business of war service.

The night came and severed them, all parties being tired with the duty of the day. Clarendon.

See how the madmen bleed! Behold the gains
With which their master, love, rewards their pains!
For seven long years, on duty ev'ry day,
Lo! their obedience, and their monarch's pay!
Dryden.

7. Tax; impost; custom; toll.

All the wines make their way through several duties and taxes, before they reach the port. Addison.

Such shekels as they now shew, were the old ones in which duty was to be paid by their law. Arbuth.

DWARF, dwôrf.[85] n. s. [ðpeopȝ, Saxon; dwerg, Dutch.]

1. A man below the common size of men.

Get you gone, you dwarf!
You minimus, of hind'ring knot-grass made.
Shakspeare.

Such dwarfs were some kind of apes. Brown.

They, but now who seem'd
In bigness to surpass earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow room
Throng numberless. Milton.

2. Any animal or plant below its natural bulk.

In a delicate plantation of trees, all well grown fair and smooth, one dwarf was knotty and crooked and the rest had it in derision. L'Estrange.

Saw off the stock in a smooth place; and for dwarf trees, graft them within four fingers of the ground. Mortimer.

3. An attendant on a lady or knight in romances.

The champion stout,
Eftsoones dismounted from his courser brave,
And to the dwarf awhile his needless spear he gave.
Spenser.

4. It is used often by botanists in composition: as, dwarf-elder, dwarf-honeysuckle.

To DWARF, dwôrf. v. a. [from the noun.] To hinder from growing to the natural bulk; to lessen; to make little.

It is reported that a good strong canvas, spread over a tree grafted low, soon after it putteth forth, will dwarf it, and make it spread. Bacon.

The whole sex is in a manner dwarfed, and shrunk into a race of beauties, that seems almost another species. Addison.

DWA'RFISH, dwôrf'ish. adj. [from dwarf.] Below the natural bulk; low; small; little; petty; despicable.

Their dwarfish pages were,
As cherubins, all gilt. Shakspeare.

And are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish and so low? Shaks.

This unheard sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories. Shaks.

A thicket close beside the grove there stood,
With briars and brambles choak'd, and dwarfish wood. Dryden.

We should have lost oaks and cedars, and the other tall and lofty sons of the forest, and have found nothing but dwarfish shrubs, and creeping moss, and despicable mushrooms. Bentley.

DWA'RFISHLY, dwôrf'ish-lê. adv. [from dwarfish.] Like a dwarf.

DWA'RFISHNESS, dwôrf'ish-nês. n. s. [from dwarfish.] Minuteness of stature; littleness.

'Tis no wonder that science hath not outgrown the dwarfishness of its pristine stature, and that the intellectual world is such a microcosm. Glanville.

To DWAULE, dwâll. v. a. [ðpelian, Sax. to wander; dwaelen, Dutch.] To be delirious: a provincial word mentioned by Junius.

To DWELL, dwêll. v. n. preterit dwelt, or dwelled. [dualla, old Teutonick, is stay, delay; duelia, Islandick, to stay, to stand still.]

1. To inhabit; to live in a place, to reside; to have a habitation.

If thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond-servant. Leviticus.

He shall dwell alone; without the camp shall his habitation be. Leviticus.

John Haywood and sir Thomas More, in the parish wherein I was born, dwelt and had possessions. Peacham.

Why are you vex'd, lady? Why do you frown?
Here dwell no frowns, nor anger; from these gates
Sorrow flies far. Milton.

2. To live in any form of habitation.

Abraham sojourned in the Land of Promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles. Hebrews.

3. To be in any state or condition.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shaks.

4. To be suspended with attention; to hang upon with care or fondness.

He in great passion all this while did dwell;
More busying his quick eyes her face to view,
Than his dull ears to hear what she did tell. Spens.

Th' attentive queen
Dwelt on his accents. Smith.

Such was that face, on which I dwelt with joy,
Ere Greece assembled stemm'd the tides to Troy.
Pope.

5. To continue long speaking.

He preach'd the joys of heav'n, and pains of hell,
And warn'd the sinner with becoming zeal:
But on eternal mercy lov'd to dwell. Dryden.

We have dwelt pretty long on the considerations of space and duration. Locke.

Those who defend our negotiators, dwell upon their zeal and patience. Swift.

To DWELL, dwêll. v. a. To inhabit. Not used.

I saw and heard; for we sometimes
Who dwell this wild, constrain'd by want, come forth
To town or village nigh. Milton.

DWE'LLER, dwêl'lûr.[98] n. s. [from dwell.] An inhabitant; one that lives in any place.

The houses being kept up, did of necessity enforce a dweller; and the proportion of land for occupation being kept up, did of necessity enforce that dweller not to be beggar or cottager, but a man of some substance. Bacon.

Their cries soon waken all the dwellers near;
Now murmuring noises rise in every street. Dryd.

DWE'LLING, dwêl'lîng. n. s. [from dwell.]

1. Habitation; place of residence; abode.

His dwelling is low in a valley green,
Under the foot of Rauran mossy hore. Fairy Q.

Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons, and a desolation for ever. Jeremiah.

If he have several dwellings, let him sort them so, that what he wanteth in the one he may find in the other. Bacon.

God will deign
To visit oft the dwellings of just men
Delighted. Milton.

All dwellings else
Flood overwhelm'd, and them with all their pomp
Deep under water roll'd: sea cover'd sea,
Sea without shore! Milton.

The living few and frequent funerals then
Proclaim'd thy wrath on this forsaken place;
And now those few, who are return'd again,
Thy searching judgments to their dwellings trace.
Dryden.

The force of fire ascended first on high,
And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky. Dryden.

2. State of life; mode of living.

Thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field. Daniel.

DWE'LLINGHOUSE, dwêl'lîng-hôûse. n. s. [from dwell and house.] The house at which one lives.

A person ought always to be cited at the place of his dwellinghouse, which he has in respect of his habitation and usual residence; and not at the house which he has in respect of his estate, or the place of his birth. Ayliffe.

DWE'LLINGPLACE, dwêl'lîng-plâse. n. s. [dwell and place.] The place of residence.

People do often change their dwellingplaces, and some must die, whilst other some do grow up into strength. Spenser.

To DWI'NDLE, dwîn'dl.[405] v. n. [ðpinan, Saxon.]

1. To shrink; to lose bulk; to grow little.

Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to the grave.
Dryden.

Proper names, when familiarized in English, dwindle to monosyllables; whereas in other languages they receive a softer turn, by the addition of a new syllable. Addison.

Our drooping days are dwindled down to nought,
Their period finish'd ere 'tis well begun. Thomson.

2. To degenerate; to sink.

'Tis now dwindled down to light frothy stuff.
Norris.

If there have been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty of the earth, that it hath dwindled from nobler animals to puny mice and insects, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables? Bentley.

He found the expected council was dwindling into a conventicle, a packed assembly of Italian bishops, not a free convention of fathers Atterbury.

Religious societies, though begun with excellent intentions, are said to have dwindled into factious clubs. Swift.

3. To wear away; to lose health; to grow feeble.

Weary sev'nnights nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine. Shakspeare.

We see that some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench or a blow, the whole leg or thigh thereby loses its strength and nourishment, and dwindles away. Locke.

Physicians, with their milky cheer,
The love-sick maid and dwindling beau repair. Gay.

4. To fall away; to be diminished; to moulder off.

Under Greenvil, there were only five hundred foot and three hundred horse left; the rest were dwindled away. Clarendon.

DYE, dī. See DIE.

DY'ING, dī'ĭng. The participle of die.

1. Expiring; giving up the ghost.
2. Tinging; giving a new colour.

DY'NASTY, dĭ-nȧs'tē, or dĭn'ȧs-tē.[503] n. s. [δυναστεία] Government; sovereignty.

Some account him fabulous, because he carries up the Egyptian dynasties before the flood, yea, and long before the creation. Hale.

Greece was divided into several dynasties, which our author has enumerated under their respective princes. Pope.

DY'SCRASY, dĭs'krȧ-sē. n. s. [δυσκρασία.] An unequal mixture of elements in the blood of nervous juice; a distemperature, when some humour or quality abounds in the body. Dict.

In this pituitous dyscrasy of blood, we must vomit off the pituita, and purge upon intermissions. Floyer on the Humours.

DYSE'NTERY, dĭs'sĕn-tĕr-ē. n. s. [dysenterie, French, from δυσεντερία.] A looseness, wherein very ill humours flow off by stool, and are also sometimes attended with blood. Dict

From an unusual inconstancy of the weather, and perpetual changes of the wind from east to west, proceed epidemical dysenteries. Arbuthnot.

DYSPE'PSY, dĭs'pĕp-sē. n. s. [δυσπεψία.] A difficulty of digestion, or bad fermentation in the stomach or guts. Dict.

DY'SPHONY, dĭs'fō-nē. n. s. [δυσφωνια.] A difficulty in speaking occasioned by an ill disposition of the organs. Dict.

It doth end in a dysentery, pains of the hæmorrhoids, inflammation of any of the lower parts, diabetes, a continual pissing, or a hot dysury, difficulty of making water. Harvey.

E.

E Has two sounds; long, as scēne, and short, as mĕn. E is the most frequent vowel in the English language; for it not only is used like the rest in the beginning or end of words, but has the peculiar quality of lengthening the foregoing vowel, as, căn, cāne; măn, māne; găf, gāfe; glad, glāde; brĕd, brēde; chĭn, chīne; wĭf, wīfe; thĭn, thīne; nŏd, nōde; tŭn, tūne; plŭm, plūme. Yet it sometimes occurs final, where yet the foregoing vowel is not lengthened; as gŏne, knowlĕdge, ĕdge, gĭve. Anciently almost every word ended with e, as for can, canne; for year, yeare; for great, greate; for need, neede; for flock, flocke. It is probable that this e final had at first a soft sound, like the female e of the French; and that afterward it was in poetry either mute or vocal, as the verse required, till at last it became universally silent.

Ea has the sound of e long: the e is commonly lengthened rather by the immediate addition of a than by the apposition of e to the end of the word: as mĕn, mēan; sĕl, sēal; mĕt, mēat; nĕt, nēat.

EACH, ētsh.[98 227] pron. [elc, Saxon; elch, Dutch; ilk, Scotish.]

1. Either of two.

Though your orbs of diff'rent greatness be,
Yet both are for each other's use dispos'd;
His to inclose, and your's to be inclos'd. Dryden.

2. Every one of any number. This sense is rare, except in poetry.

Th' invention all admir'd, and each how he
To be th' inventer miss'd. Milton.

Let each
His adamantine coat gird well, and each
Fit well his helm. Milton.

By hunger, that each other creature tames,
Thou art not to be harm'd, therefore not mov'd;
Thy temperance invincible besides. Milton.

Wise Plato said, the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.

To EACH the correspondent word is other, whether it be used of two, or of a greater number.

'Tis said they eat each other. Shakspeare.

Let each esteem other better than themselves. Phil.

Loveliest of women! heaven is in thy soul;
Beauty and virtue shine for ever round thee,
Bright'ning each other! Thou art all divine. Addi.

EAD, ēd. [æd, ed.] in the compound, and eadig in the simple names, denotes happiness, or blessedness. Thus Eadward is a happy preserver; Eadulph, happy assistance; Eadgar, happy power; Eadwin, happy conqueror; which Macarius, Eupolemus, Fausta, Fortunatus, Felicianus, &c. do in some measure resemble. Ead may also in some cases be derived from the Saxon eath, which signifies easy, gentle, mild. Gibson's Camden.

EA'GER, ē'gûr.[227] adj. [eaȝop, Saxon; aigre, Fr.]

1. Struck with desire; ardently wishing; keenly desirous; vehement in desire; hotly longing.

Of action eager, and intent of thought,
The chiefs your honourable danger sought. Dryden.

Eager to read the rest, Achates came. Dryden.

With joy th' ambitious youth his mother heard,
And, eager, for the journey, soon prepar'd;
He longs the world beneath him to survey,
To guide the chariot, and to give the day. Dryden.

Love inflam'd, and eager on his bliss,
Smother'd her words. Addison.

2. It is used sometimes with of, sometimes with for, sometimes with on or after before the thing sought.

3. Hot of disposition; vehement; ardent; impetuous

Apt as well to quicken the spirits as to allay that which is too eager. Hooker.

Nor do the eager clamours of disputants yield more relief to eclipsed truth, than did the sounding brass of old to the labouring moon. Glanville.

Imperfect zeal is hot and eager, without knowledge. Sprat.

Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryden.

A man, charged with a crime of which he thinks himself innocent, is apt to be too eager in his own defence. Dryden.

4. Quick; busy; easily put in action.

His Numidian genius
Is well dispos'd to mischief, were he prompt
And eager on it; but he must be spurr'd. Addison.

5. Sharp; sour; acid.

With a sudden vigour it doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood. Shakspeare.

6. Keen; severe; biting.

The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.
—It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakspeare.

The flesh shrinketh, but the bone resisteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager. Bacon.

7. Brittle; inflexible; not ductile. A cant word of artificers.

Gold will be sometimes so eager, as artists call it, that it will as little endure the hammer as glass itself. Locke.

EA'GERLY, ē'gûr-lē. adv. [from eager.]

1. With great ardour of desire; with impetuosity of inclination.

To the holy war how fast and eagerly did men go, when the priest persuaded them that whosoever died in that expedition was a martyr! South.

How eagerly he flew, when Europe's fate
Did for the seed of future actions wait. Stepney

2. Ardently; hotly.

Brutus gave the word too early,
Who having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Antony were all inclos'd. Shakspeare.

3. Keenly; sharply.

Abundance of rain froze so eagerly as it fell, that it seemed the depth of winter had of a sudden been come in. Knolles.

EA'GERNESS, ē'gŭr-nĕs. n. s. [from eager.]

1. Keenness of desire; ardour of inclination.

She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
Madding my eagerness with her restraint. Shaksp.
Have you not seen, when whistling from the fist,
Some faulcon stoop'd at what her eye design'd,
And, with her eagerness, the quarry miss'd. Dryden.
The eagerness and strong bent of the mind after knowledge if not warily regulated, is often an hindrance to it. Locke.
Detraction and obloquy are received with as much eagerness as wit and humour. Addison.
Juba lives to catch
That dear embrace, and to return it too,
With mutual warmth and eagerness of love. Addis.
His continued application to publick affairs diverts him from those pleasures, which are pursued with eagerness by princes who have not the publick so much at heart. Addison.
The things of this world, with whatever eagerness they engage our pursuit, leave us still empty, and unsatisfied with their fruition. Rogers.

2. Impetuosity; vehemence; violence.

It finds them in the eagerness and height of their devotion; they are speechless for the time that it continues, and prostrate and dead when it departs. Dryden.
I'll kill thee with such eagerness of haste,
As fiends, let loose, would lay all nature waste. Dryden.

EA'GLE, ē'gl.[227] [405] n. s. [aigle, French; aquila, Latin; ealler, Erse.]

1. A bird of prey.

The eagle, as it is reported, renews its age when it grows old. It is also said not to drink at all, like other birds with sharp claws. It is given out, that when an eagle sees its young so well grown as to venture upon flying, it hovers over their nest, and excites them to imitate it, and take their flight; and when it sees them weary, or fearful, it takes them upon its back. Eagles are said to be extremely sharp-sighted, and, when they take flight, spring perpendicularly upward, with their eyes steadily fixed upon the sun. Calmet.
Draw forth the monsters of th' abyss profound,
Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope.

2. The standard of the ancient Romans.

Arts still followed where Rome's eagles flew. Pope.

EA'GLE-EYED, ē'gl-īde.[282] adj. [from eagle and eyed.] Sharp-sighted as an eagle.

As he was quick and perspicacious, so was he inwardly eagle-eyed, and versed in the humours of his subjects. Howel.
Ev'ry one is eagle-eyed to see
Another's faults and his deformity. Dryden.

EA'GLESPEED, ē'gl-spēēd. n. s. [eagle and speed.] Swiftness like that of an eagle.

Abrupt, with eagle-speed she cut the sky,
Instant invisible to mortal eye. Pope.

EA'GLESTONE, ē'gl-stōne. n. s. A stone said to be found at the entrance of the holes in which the eagles make their nests, and affirmed to have a particular virtue in defending the eagle's nest from thunder. Calmet

The eaglestone contains, in a cavity within it, a small loose stone, which rattles when it is shaken; and every fossil, with a nucleus in it, has obtained the name. The analogy between a stone thus containing another within it, or, as the fanciful writers express it, pregnant with another, and a woman big with child, led people to imagine that it must have great virtues and effect in accelerating or retarding delivery; so that, if tied to the arm of a woman with child, it prevents abortion; and if to the leg, it promotes delivery. On such idle and imaginary virtues was raised all the credit which this famous fossil possessed for many ages. Hill.
If you stop the hole of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle; and so doth the ætites, or eaglestone, which hath a little stone within it. Bacon.

EA'GLET, ē'glĕt. n. s. [from eagle.] A young eagle.

This treason of his sons did the king express in an emblem, wherein was an eagle with three eaglets tyring on her breast, and the fourth picking at one of her eyes. Davies.

EA'GRE, ē'gŭr. n. s. [æger, in Runick, is the ocean; eggia, in Islandick, is to agitate, to incite.] A tide swelling above another tide, observable in the river Severn.

For as an eagre rides in triumph o'er the tide,
The tyrant passions, hope and fear,
Did in extremes appear,
And flash'd upon the soul with equal force. Dryden.

EA'LDERMAN, ēl'dŭr-măn. n. s. [ealdeꝑman, Sax.] The name of a Saxon magistrate; alderman.

EAME, ēme. n. s. [eam, Saxon; oom, Dutch.] Uncle: a word still used in the wilder parts of Staffordshire.

Daughter, says she, fly, fly; behold thy dame
Foreshows the treason of thy wretched eame!
Fairfax.

EAR, ēēr.[227] n. s. [eaꝑe, Saxon; oor, Dutch.]

1. The whole organ of audition or hearing.

What fire is in my ears? can this be true?
Stand I condemn'd! Shaksp.
His ears are open unto their cry. Psalms.

EARL, êrl.[234 237] n. s. [eorl, Sax. eoryl, Erse.] A title of nobility, anciently the highest of this nation, now the third.

Thanes and kinsmen,
Henceforth be earls, the first that ever Scotland
For such an honour named. Shaksp.

EARL-MARSHAL, êrl'mâr'shâl. n. s. [earl and marshal.] He that has chief care of military solemnities.

The marching troops through Athens take their way;
The great earl-marshal orders their array. Dryd.

EA'RLDOM, êrl'dûm.[166] n. s. [from earl.] The seigniory of an earl; the title and dignity of an earl.

The duke of Clarence having married the heir of the earl of Ulster, and by her having all the earldom of Ulster, carefully went about redressing evils. Spenser.

When I am king, claim thou of me
The earldom of Hereford. Shaksp.

EA'RLINESS, êr'lê-nês. n. s. [from early.] Quickness of any action with respect to something else: as, earliness in the morning, the act of rising soon with respect to the sun; earliness of growth, the act of growing up soon in comparison with other things of the same kind.

The next morning we, having striven with the sun's earliness, were beyond the prospect of the highest turrets. Sidney.

The goodness of the crop is great gain, if the goodness answer the earliness of coming up. Bacon.

EA'RLY, êr'lê.[234] adj. [æp, Sax. before.] Soon with respect to something else: as, in the morning, with respect to the sun; in time, with respect to creation; in the season, in comparison with other products.

I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Meetest for death: the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me. Shaksp.

It is a curiosity to have several fruits upon one tree; and the more when some of them come early and some come late. Bacon.

God made all the world, that he might be worshipped in some parts of the world; and therefore, in the first and most early times of the church, what care did he manifest to have such places erected to his honour? South.

The nymphs, forsaking every cave and spring,
Their early fruit and milk-white turtles bring. Pope.

Sickness is early old age: it teaches us diffidence in our earthly state, and inspires us with thoughts of a future. Pope.

Oh soul of honour!
Oh early heroe! Smith.

EA'RLY, êr'lê. adv. [from the adjective.] Soon; betime.

Early before the morn, with crimson ray,
The windows of bright heav'n opened had. Spenser.

None in more languages can show
Those arts, which you so early know. Waller.

The princess makes her issue like herself, by instilling early into their minds religion, virtue, and honour. Addison.

To EARN, êrn.[234 371] v. a. [eapnian, Sax.]

1. To gain as the reward or wages of labour, or any performance.

Those that have joined with their honour great perils, are less subject to envy; for men think that they earn their honours hardly. Bacon.

Winning cheap the high repute,
Which he through hazard huge must earn. Milton.

I to the evil turn
My obvious breast; arming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won. Milt.

Men may discern
From what consummate virtue I have chose
This perfect man, by merit call'd my Son,
To earn salvation for the sons of men. Milton.

Since they all beg, it were better for the state to keep them, even although they earned nothing. Graunt.

This is the great expence of the poor, that takes up almost all their earnings. Locke.

The poems gained the plagiary wealth, while the author hardly earned his bread by repeating them. Pope.

After toiling twenty days,
To earn a stock of pence and praise,
Thy labour's grown the critick's prey. Swift.

2. To obtain, as a consequence of action.

I can't say whore;
It does abhor me, now I speak the word:
To do the act, that might th' addition earn,
Not the world's mass of vanity could make me. Shaksp.

EA'RNEST, êr'nêst.[234] adj. [eopnepc, Sax.]

1. Ardent in any affection; warm; zealous; importunate.

He which prayeth in due sort, is thereby made the more attentive to hear; and he which heareth, the more earnest to pray for the time which we bestow, as well in the one as the other. Hooker.

2. Intent; fixed; eager.

On that prospect strange
Their earnest eyes were fixed; imagining,
For one forbidden tree, a multitude
Now ris'n, to work them further woe or shame. Milton.

They are never more earnest to disturb us, than when they see us most earnest in this duty. Duppa.

3. Serious; important. Some say in earnest, not in jest.

They whom earnest lets do often hinder from being partakers of the whole, have yet this the length of divine service, opportunity for access unto some reasonable part thereof. Hooker.

EA'RNEST, êr'nêst. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Seriousness; a serious event, not a jest; reality, not a feigned appearance.

Take heed that this jest do not one day turn to earnest. Sidney.

I told you Klaius was the hapless wight,
Who earnest found what they accounted play. Sidney.

Therewith she laughed, and did her earnest end in jest. Fairy Queen.

That high All-seer, which I dallied with,
Hath turned my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shaksp.

Nor can I think that God, Creator wise!
Though threat'ning, will in earnest so destroy
Us, his prime creatures. Milton.

But the main business and earnest of the world is money, dominion, and power. L'Estrange.

We shall die in earnest, and it will not become us to live in jest. Government of the Tongue.

Sempronius, you have acted like yourself;
One would have thought you had been half in earnest. Addison.

2. [ernitz penge, Danish; arres, French.] Pledge; handsel; first-fruits; token of something of the same kind in futurity.

The apostles term it the handsel or earnest of that which is to come. Hooker.

Which leader shall the doubtful vict'ry bless,
And give an earnest of the war's success. Waller.

It may be looked upon as a pledge and earnest of quiet and tranquillity. Smalridge.

The mercies received, great as they are, were earnests and pledges of greater. Atterbury.

3. The money which is given in token that a bargain is ratified.

You have conspir'd against our person,
Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his coffers
Receiv'd the golden earnest of our death. Shaksp.

Pay back the earnest penny received from Satan, and fling away his sin. Decay of Piety.

EA'RNESTLY, êr'nêst-lê. adv. [from earnest.]

1. Warmly; affectionately; zealously; importunately; intensely.

When earnestly they seek
Such proof, conclude they then begun to fail. Milt.

Shame is a banishment of him from the good opinion of the world, which every man most earnestly desires. South.

Earnestly invoke the goodness and power of an all-merciful and almighty God. Smalridge.

2. Eagerly; desirously.

Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter? Shaksp.

My soul, more earnestly releas'd,
Will outstrip her's; as bullets blown before,
A latter bullet may o'ertake, the powder being more. Donne.

EA'RNESTNESS, êr'nêst-nês. n. s. [from earnest.]

1. Eagerness; warmth; vehemence; impetuosity.

Often with a solemn earnestness,
More than, indeed, belong'd to such a trifle,
He begg'd of me to steal it. Shaksp.

Audacity and confidence doth in business so great effects, as a man may doubt, that besides the very daring and earnestness, and persisting and importunity, there should be some secret binding, and stooping of other men's spirits to such persons. Bacon.

Marcus is overwarm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addison.

2. Solemnity; zeal; seriousness.

There was never a charge maintained with such a shew of gravity and earnestness, which had a slighter foundation to support it. Atterbury.

3. Solicitude; care; intenseness.
With overstraining, and earnestness of finishing their pieces, they often did them more harm than good. Dryden.

EARSH, ėrsh. n. s. [from ear, to plow.] A plowed field. Not now in use.
Fires oft are good on barren earshes made,
With crackling flames to burn the stubble blade. May.

EARTH, ėrth. [234] [237] n. s. [eopτ, Sax.]
1. The element distinct from air, fire, or water; soil; terrene matter.
The smiling god is seen; while water, earth,
And air attest his bounty. Thomson.
2. The terraqueous globe; the world.
Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give. Shaksp.
This solid globe we live upon is called the earth; which word taken in a more limited sense, signifies such parts of this globe as are capable, being exposed to the air, to give rooting and nourishment to plants, so that they may stand and grow in it. Locke.
3. Different modification of terrene matter. In this sense it has a plural.
The five genera of earths are, 1. Boles. 2. Clays. 3. Marls. 4. Ochres. 5. Tripelas. Hill.
Earths are opake, insipid, and, when dried, friable, or consisting of parts easy to separate, and soluble in water; not disposed to burn, flame, or take fire. Woodward.
4. This world opposed to other scenes of existence.
What are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on't? Shaksp.
They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heav'n
Will not have earth to know. Shaksp.
5. The inhabitants of the earth.
The whole earth was of one language. Genesis.
6. Country; distinct region.
In ten set battles have we driven back
These heathen Saxons, and regain'd our earth,
As earth recovers from the ebbing tide. Dryden.
7. The act of turning up the ground in tillage. [from ear, to plow.]
Such land as ye break up for barley to sow,
Two earths, at the least, ere ye sow it, bestow. Tusser.

To EARTH, ėrth. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To hide in earth.
The fox is earthed; but I shall send my two tarriers in after him. Dryden.
2. To cover with earth.
Earth up with fresh mould the roots of those auricula's which the frost may have uncovered. Evelyn.

To EARTH, ėrth. v. n. To retire under ground.
Hence foxes earth'd, and wolves abhorr'd the day,
And hungry churls ensnar'd the nightly prey. Tickel.

EA'RTHBOARD, ėrth'bōrd. n. s. [earth and board.] The board of the plough that shakes off the earth.
The plow reckoned the most proper for stiff black clays, is one that is long, large, and broad, with a a deep head and a square earthboard, so as to turn up a great furrow. Mortimer.

EA'RTHBORN, ėrth'bōrn. adj. [earth and born.]
1. Born of the earth; terrigenous.
The wounds I make but sow new enemies:
Which from their blood, like earthborn brethren rise. Dryden.
The God for ever great, for ever king,
Who slew the earthborn race and measures right
To heav'n's great habitants. Prior.
2. Meanly born.
Earthborn Lycon shall ascend the throne. Smith.

EA'RTHBOUND, ėr*th*'bǭůnd. adj. [earth and bound.] Fastened by the pressure of earth.
Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earthbound root? Shaksp.

EA'RTHEN, ėr'*th*n. [103] adj. [from earth.] Made of earth; made of clay.
About his shelves
Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds
Were thinly scattered. Shaksp.
As a rustick was digging the ground by Padua, he found an urn, or earthen pot, in which there was another urn, and in this lesser a lamp clearly burning. Wilkins.
The most brittle water-carriage was used among the Egyptians, who, as Strabo saith, would sail sometimes in the boats made of earthen ware. Arbuthnot.

EA'RTHFLAX, ėrth'flåks. n. s. [earth and flax.] A kind of fibrous fossil.
Of English talc, the coarser sort is called plaister, or parget; the finer, earthflax, or salamander's hair. Woodward.

EA'RTHLING, ėrth'ling. n. s. [from earth.] An inhabitant of the earth; a mortal; a poor frail creature.
To earthlings, the footstool of God, that stage which he raised for a small time, seemeth magnificent. Drummond.

EA'RTHLY, ėrth'lė. adj. [from earth.]
1. Not heavenly; vile; mean; sordid.
But I remember now
I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudable; to do good, sometime
Accounted dangerous folly. Shaksp.
When faith and love, which parted from thee never,
Had ripen'd thy just soul to dwell with God,
Meekly thou didst resign this earthly load
Of death call'd life. Milton.
2. Belonging only to our present state; not spiritual.
Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind easily known. Hooker.
You have scarce time
To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span
To keep your earthly audit. Shaksp.
It must be our solemn business and endeavour at fit seasons, to turn the stream of our thoughts from earthly towards divine objects. Atterbury.
3. Corporeal; not mental.
Great grace that old man to him given had,
For God he often saw, from heaven hight,
All were his earthly eyen both blunt and bad. Spenser.
Sudden he view'd, in spite of all her art,
An earthly lover lurking at her heart. Pope.
4. Any thing in the world: a female hyperbole.
Oh! if to dance all night, and dress all day,
Charm'd the small-pox, or chas'd old age away,
Who would not scorn what housewife's cares produce?
Or who would learn one earthly thing of use? Pope.

EA'RTHNUT, ėrth'nůt. n. s. [earth and nut.] A pignut; a root in shape and size like a nut.
Where there are earthnuts in several patches, though the roots lie deep in the ground, and the stalks be dead, the swine will by their scent root only where they grow. Ray.

EA'RTHQUAKE, ėrth'qwāke. n. s. [earth and quake.] Tremour or convulsion of the earth.
This subterranean heat or fire being in any part of the earth stopt, by some accidental glut or obstruction in the passages through which it used to ascend, and being preternaturally assembled in greater quantity into one place, causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions; and making the like effort upon the earth, expanded upon the face of the abyss, occasions that agitation and concussion which we call an earthquake. Woodward.
These tumults were like an earthquake, shaking the very foundations of all, than which nothing in the world hath more of horrour. King Charles.
Was it his youth, his valour, or success,
These might perhaps be found in other men:
'Twas that respect, that awful homage paid me;
That fearful love which trembled in his eyes,
And with a silent earthquake shook his soul. Dryd.
The country, by reason of its vast caverns and subterraneous fires, has been miserably torn by earthquakes, so that the whole face of it is quite changed. Addison.

EA'RTHSHAKING, ėrth'shå-kĭng. adj. [earth and shake.] Having power to shake the earth, or to raise earthquakes.
By the earthshaking Neptune's mace,
And Tethys' grave majestick pace. Milton.
Now scarce withdrawn the fierce earthshaking pow'r,
Jove's daughter Pallas watch'd the fav'ring hour;
Back to their cave she bade the winds to fly,
And hush'd the blust'ring brethren of the sky. Pope.

EA'RTHWORM, ėrth'wůrm. n. s. [earth and worm.]
1. A worm bred under ground.
Worms are found in snow commonly, like earthworms, and therefore it is not unlike that it may likewise put forth plants. Bacon.
Upon a shower, after a drought, earthworms and landsnails innumerable come out of their lurking places. Ray.
2. A mean sordid wretch.
Thy vain contempt, dull earthworm cease;
I won't for refuge fly. Norris.

EA'RTHY, ėrth'ė. adj. [from earth.]
1. Consisting of earth.
Long may'st thou live in Richard's seat to sit,
And soon lie Richard in an earthy pit! Shaksp.
Lamps are inflamed by the admission of new air, when the sepulchres are opened, as we see in fat earthy vapours of divers sorts. Wilkins.
All water, especially that of rain, is stored with matter, light in comparison of the common earthy matter. Woodward.
2. Composed or partaking of earth; terrene.
To survey his dead and earthy image,
What were it but to make my sorrow greater. Shaksp.
Him lord pronounc'd he, O indignity!
Subjected to his service angel-wings,
And flaming ministers to watch and tend
Their earthy charge. Milton.
3. Inhabiting the earth; terrestrial.
Those earthy spirits black and envious are;
I'll call up other gods of form more fair. Dryden.
4. Relating to earth.
Mine is the shipwreck, in a watry sign;
And in an earthy, the dark dungeon thine. Dryden.
5. Not mental; gross; not refined.
Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;
Lay open to my earthy gross conceit,
Smother'd in errors, feeble, shallow, weak,
The folded meaning of your words deceit. Shaksp.
Nor is my flame
So earthy, as to need the dull material force
Of eyes, or lips, or cheeks. Denham

EASE, ėze.[227] n. s. [aise, Fr.]

1. Quiet; rest; undisturbed tranquillity; not solicitude.

We should not find her half so brave and bold
To lead it to the wars and to the seas:
To make it suffer watchings, hunger, cold,
When it might feed with plenty, rest with ease.
Davies.

The priest on skins of off'ring takes his ease,
And nightly visions in his slumber sees. Dryden.

2. Freedom from pain; a neutral state between pain and pleasure.

That which we call ease is only an indolency, or a freedom from pain. L'Estrange.

Is it a small crime to wound himself by anguish of heart, to deprive himself of all the pleasures, or eases, or enjoyments of life? Temple.

3. Rest after labour; intermission of labour.

Give yourselves ease from the fatigue of waiting. Swift.

4. Facility; not difficulty.

The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease, if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state;
If not, no labour can the tree constrain,
And strength of stubborn arms and steel are vain.
Dryden.

5. Unconstraint; freedom from harshness; formality, forced behaviour or conceits.

True ease in writing comes from art, not chance;
As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance.
Pope.

6. At EASE. In a state of undisturbed leisure; without pain; without anxiety.

Lucan, content with praise, may lie at ease,
In costly grotts and marble palaces. Dryden.

Men of parts and penetration were not idly to dispute at their ease, but were to act according to the result of their debates. Locke.

No body is under an obligation to know every thing: knowledge and science in general is the business only of those who are at ease and leisure. Locke.

To EASE, ėze. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To free from pain.

Help and ease children the best you can: but by no means bemoan them. Locke.

2. To assuage; to mitigate; to alleviate.

Thy father made our yoke grievous, now therefore ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude.
2 Chron.

Complain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;
It shall be eas'd, if France can yield relief. Shaksp.

As if with sports my sufferings I could ease.
Dryden.

Though he speaks of such medicines as procure sleep and ease pain, he doth not determine their doses. Arbuthnot.

Will he for sacrifice our sorrows ease?
And can our tears reverse his firm decrees? Prior.

3. To relieve from labour, or any thing that offends; with of before the thing.

If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear;
And that thou may'st not be too late abroad
Sing, and I'll ease thy shoulders of thy load. Dryd.

I will ease me of mine adversaries. Isaiah.

Nobody feels pain that he wishes not to be eased of, with a desire equal to that pain, and inseparable from it. Locke.

EA'SEFUL, ėze'fûl. adj. [ease and full.] Quiet; peaceable; fit for rest.

I spy a black, suspicious, threat'ning cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun,
Ere he attain his easeful western bed. Shaksp.

EA'SEMENT, ėze'mėnt. n. s. [from ease.]

1. Assistance; support; relief from expenses.

He has the advantage of a free lodging, and some other easements. Swift.

2. [In law.] A service that one neighbour has of another by charter or prescription, without profit; as a way through his ground, a sink, or such like. Cowell.

EA'SILY, ė'zė-lė. adv. [from easy.]

1. Without difficulty.

Sounds move swiftly, and at a great distance; but they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped. Bacon.

She ask'd the reason of his woe;
She ask'd, but with an air and mein
That made it easily foreseen
She fear'd too much to know. Prior.

2. Without pain; without disturbance; in tranquillity.

Is it not to bid defiance to all mankind to condemn their universal opinions and designs, if, instead of passing your life as well and easily, you resolve to pass it as ill and as miserable as you can? Temple.

3. Readily; without reluctance.

I can easily resign to others the praise of your illustrious family. Dryden.

Not soon provok'd, she easily forgives;
And much she suffers, as she much believes. Prior.

EA'SINESS, ė'zė-nės. n. s. [from easy.]

1. Freedom from difficulty.

Believe me, friends, loud tumults are not laid
With half the easiness that they are rais'd. Ben J.

Easiness and difficulty are relative terms, and relate to some power; and a thing may be difficult to a weak man, which yet may be easy to the same person, when assisted with a greater strength. Tillotson.

The seeming easiness of Pindarick verse has made it spread; but it has not been considered. Dryden.

You left a conquest more than half atchiev'd,
And for whose easiness I almost griev'd. Dryden.

This plea, under a colour of friendship to religion, invites men to it by the easiness of the terms it offers. Rogers.

2. Flexibility; compliance; readiness; not opposition; not reluctance.

His yielding unto them in one thing might happily put them in hope, that time would breed the like easiness of condescending further unto them. Hooker.

Since the custom of easiness to alter and change laws is so evil, no doubt but to bear a tolerable sore is better than to venture on a dangerous remedy. Hooker.

Give to him, and he shall but laugh at your easiness; save his life, but, when you have done, look to your own. South.

The safest way to secure honesty, is to lay the foundations of it early in liberality, and an easiness to part with to others whatever they have or like themselves. Locke.

3. Freedom from constraint; not effort; not formality.

Abstruse and mystic thoughts you must express
With painful care, but seeming easiness;
For truth shines brightest through the plainest dress.
Roscommon.

4. Rest; tranquillity; ease; freedom from pain.

I think the reason I have assigned hath a great interest in that rest and easiness we enjoy when asleep. Ray.

EAST, ėėst.[227 246] n. s. [eorc, Sax. heos, Erse.]

1. The quarter where the sun rises: opposite to the west.

They counting forwards towards the east, did allow 180 degrees to the Portugals eastward. Abbot.

2. The regions in the eastern parts of the world.

I would not be the villain that thou thinkest
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich east to boot. Shaksp.

The gorgeous east, with richest hand,
Pours on her kings barbarick, pearl and gold. Milt.

EA'STER, ėės'tûr.[98] n. s. [eaꝛcne, Saxon; ooster, Dutch.] The day on which the christian church commemorates our Saviour's resurrection.

Didst thou not fall out with a taylor for wearing his new doublet before Easter. Shaksp.

Victor's unbrother-like heat towards the eastern churches, in the controversy about Easter, fomented that difference into a schism. Decay of Piety.

EA'STERLING, ėės'tûr-ling. n. s. [from east.]

1. A native of some country eastward to another.

He oft in battle vanquish'd
Those spoilful, rich, and swarming Easterlings.
Spenser.

2. A species of waterfowl.

EA'STERLY, ėės'tûr-lė. adj. [from east.]

1. Coming from the parts toward the east.

When the easterly winds or breezes are kept off by some high mountains from the vallies, whereby the air wanting motion, doth become exceedingly unhealthful. Raleigh.

2. Lying toward the east.

These give us a view of the most easterly, southerly, and westerly parts of England. Graunt.

3. Looking toward the east.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell, drawn from springs with an easterly exposition. Arbuthnot.

EA'STERN, ėės'tûrn. adj. [from east.]

1 Dwelling or found in the east; oriental.

Like eastern kings a lazy state they keep. Pope.

Eastern tyrants from the light of heaven
Seclude their bosom slaves. Thomson.

2. Lying or being toward the east.

The eastern end of the isles rises up in precipices. Addison.

3. Going toward the east.

A ship at sea has no certain method in either her eastern or western voyages, or even in her less distant sailing from the coasts, to know her longitude, or how much she is gone eastward or westward, as can easily be known in any clear day or night how much she is gone northward or southward. Addison.

4. Looking toward the east.

Th' angel caught
Our ling'ring parents, and to th' eastern gate
Led them direct. Milton.

EA'STWARD, ėės'wûrd.[88] adv. [east and toward.] Toward the east.

The moon which performs its motion swifter than the sun, gets eastward out of his rays, and appears when the sun is set. Brown.

What shall we do, or where direct our flight?
Eastward, as far as I could cast my sight,
From op'ning heav'ns, I saw descending light. Dry.

EA'SY, ė'zė. adj. [from ease.]

1. Not difficult.

The service of god, in the solemn assembly of the saints, is a work, though easy, yet withal very weighty, and of great respect. Hooker.

How much is it in every one's power to make resolutions to himself, such as he may keep, is easy for every one to try. Locke.

2. Not causing difficulty.

The whole island was probably cut into several easy ascents, and planted with a variety of palaces. Addison.

3. Quiet; at rest; not harassed; unmolested; secure; not anxious.

Those that are easy in their conditions, or their minds, refuse often to enter upon publick charges or employment. Temple.

Keep your thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations. Locke.

A marriage of love is pleasant, a marriage of interest easy, and a marriage where both meet happy. Addison.

When men are easy in their circumstances, they are naturally enemies to innovations. Addison.

A man should direct all his studies and endeavours at making himself easy now, and happy hereafter. Addison.

We plainly feel whether at this instant we are easy or uneasy, happy or miserable. Smalridge.

4. Free from pain.

Bold adventure to discover wide
That dismal world, if any clime perhaps
Might yield them easier habitation. Milton.

Pleasure has been the business of my life,
And every change of fortune easy to me,
Because I still was easy to myself. Dryden.

5. Complying; unresisting; credulous.

Baited with reasons not unplausible,
Win me into the easy hearted man,
And hug him into snares. Milton.

With such deceits he gain'd their easy hearts,
Too prone to credit his perfidious arts. Dryden.

The kindest father I have ever found him,
Easy and good, and bounteous to my wishes. Add.

6. Ready; not unwilling.

Pity and he are one;
So merciful a king did never live,
Loth to revenge, and easy to forgive. Dryden.

7. Free from want of more.

They should be allowed each of them such a rent as would make them easy. Swift.

8. Not constrained; not formal.

Those move easiest that have learn'd to dance. Pope.

Praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength, and Waller's sweetness join. Pope.

To EAT, ête.[227 229] v. a. preterit ate, or eat; part. eat, or eaten. [ɛ̄tan, Saxon; itan, Gothick; eick, Erse.]

1. To devour with the mouth.

Locusts shall eat the residue of that which is escaped from the hail, and shall eat every tree which groweth. Exodus.

Other states cannot be accused for not staying for the first blow, or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up. Bacon.

Even wormwood, eat with bread, will not bite, because it is mixed with a great quantity of spittle. Arbuthnot.

2. To consume; to corrode.

Thou best of gold art worst of gold;
Other less fine in carat is more precious,
Preserving life in med'cine potable:
But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most renown'd,
Hast eat thy bearer up. Shaksp.

They entail a secret curse upon their estates, which does either insensibly waste and consume it, or eat out the heart and comfort of it. Tillotson.

Eating cares,
Lydian airs. Milton.

There arises a necessity of keeping the surface even, either by pressure or eating medicines, that the eminence of the flesh may not resist the fibres of the skin in their tendency to cover the wound. Sharp's Surgery.

3. To swallow back; to retract. This is only used of a man's word.

They cannot hold, but burst out those words, which afterwards they are forced to eat. Hakewill.

Credit were not to be lost
B' a brave knight errant of the post,
That eats, perfidiously, his word,
And swears his ears through a two-inch board!
Hudibras.

To EAT, ête. v. n.

1. To go to meals; to take meals; to feed.

He did eat continually at the king's table. 2 Samuel.

And when the scribes and pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, How is it that he eateth with publicans and sinners? Matthew.

2. To take food.

He that will not eat till he has a demonstration that it will nourish him, he that will not stir till he infallibly knows the business he goes about will succeed, will have little else to do but sit still and perish. Locke.

3. To be maintained in food.

The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul, but the belly of the wicked shall want. Proverbs.

Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to cloath and eat. Shaksp.

But thanks to my indulgent stars, I eat,
Since I have found the secret to be great. Prior.

4. To make way by corrosion.

The plague of sin has even altered his nature, and eaten into his very essentials. South.

A prince's court eats too much into the income of a poor state. Addison.

EA'TABLE, ē'tâ-bl.[405] adj. [from eat.] That may be eaten.

EA'TABLE, ē'tâ-bl. n. s. Any thing that may be eaten.

If you all sorts of persons would engage,
Suit well your eatables to ev'ry age. King.

EA'TER, ē'tûr.[98] n. s. [from eat.]

1. One that eats any thing.

The Caribees and the Cannibals, almost all, are eaters of man's flesh. Abbot.

A knave, a rascal, an eater of broken meats. Shaksp.

If the taste of this fruit maketh the eaters like gods, why remainest thou a beast? Brown.

As if the lotus grew only here, the virtue of whose fruit is to cause in the eaters an oblivion of all other soils. Howel.

2. A corrosive.

EATH, ēth. adj. [eaȝ, Sax.] Easy; not difficult. An old word.

Where ease abounds, it's eath to do amiss. Fairy Queen.

What works not beauty, man's relenting mind
Is eath to move with plaints and shews of woe. Fairfax.

The way was strait and eath. Fairfax.

EATH, ēth. adv. [from the adjective.] Easily. An old word.

Who hath the world not try'd,
From the right way full eath may wander wide. Hubberd's Tale.

EA'TINGHOUSE, ē'ting-hôûse. n. s. [eat and house.] A house where provisions are sold ready dressed.

An hungry traveller stept into an eatinghouse for his dinner. L'Estrange.

EAVES, ēvz.[227] n. s. [ɛ̄ɛ̄e, Sax.] The edges of the roof which overhang the house.

Every night he comes
With musick of all sorts, and songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing stead us
To chide him from our eaves; for he persists,
As if his life lay on't. Shaksp.

His tears run down his beard, like winter drops
From eaves of reeds. Shaksp.

If in the beginning of winter the drops of the eaves of houses come more slowly down than they use, it portendeth a hard and frosty winter. Bacon.

Usher'd with a shower still,
When the gust hath blown his fill,
Ending on the rustling leaves,
With minute drops from off the eaves. Milton.

The icicles hang down from the eaves of houses. Woodward.

To EA'VESDROP, ēvz'drôp. v. a. [eaves and drop.] To catch what comes from the eaves; in common phrase, to listen under windows.

EA'VESDROPPER, ēvz'drôp-pûr. n. s. [eaves and dropper.] A listener under windows; an insidious listener.

Under our tents I'll play the eavesdropper,
To hear if any mean to shrink from me. Shaksp.

EBB, ēb. n. s. [ebba, ɛ̄ꝑꝑiȝ, Sax. ebbe, Dut.]

1. The reflux of the tide toward the sea; opposed to flow.

The clear sun on his wide wat'ry glass
Gaz'd hot, and of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake, to tripping ebb, that stole
With soft foot tow'rds the deep. Milton.

Hither the seas at stated times resort,
And shove the loaden vessels into port:
Then with a gentle ebb retire again,
And render back their cargo to the main. Addison.

2. Decline; decay; waste.

You have finished all the war, and brought all things to that low ebb which you speak of. Spenser.

This tide of man's life, after it once turneth and declineth, ever runneth with a perpetual ebb and falling stream, but never floweth again. Raleigh.

Thus all the treasure of our flowing years,
Our ebb of life for ever takes way. Roscommon.

The greatest age for poetry was that of Augustus Cæsar, yet painting was then at its lowest ebb, and perhaps sculpture was also declining. Dryden.

Near my apartment let him pris'ner be,
That I his hourly ebbs of life may see. Dryden.

What is it he aspires to?
Is it not this? To shed the slow remains,
His last poor ebb of blood in your defence. Addison.

To EBB, ēb. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To flow back toward the sea; opposed to flow.

Though my tide of blood
Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now,
Now it doth turn and ebb back to the sea. Shaksp.

From thence the tide of fortune left the shore,
And ebb'd much faster than it flow'd before. Dryd.

2. To decline; to decay; to waste.

Well, I am standing water:
——I'll teach you how to flow
——Do so: to ebb
Hereditary sloth instructs me. Shaksp.

But oh, he ebbs! the smiling waves decay!
For ever lovely stream, for ever stay! Halifax.

E'BEN, ēb'bn. } E'BON, ēb'ûn. } E'BONY, ēb'ô-nē. } n. s. [ebenus, Lat.] A hard, heavy, black, valuable wood, which admits a fine gloss.

If the wood be very hard, as ebony or lignum vitæ, they are to turn; they use not the same tools they do for soft woods. Moxon.

Oft by the winds extinct the signal lies,
Ere night has half roll'd round her ebon throne. Gay.

EBRI'ETY, ē-brī'ē-tē. n. s. [ebrietas, Lat.] Drunkenness; intoxication by strong liquors.

Bitter almonds, as an antidote against ebriety, hath commonly failed. Brown.

EBRI'LLADE, ē-brīl'lâde. n. s. [Fr.] A check of the bridle which a horseman gives a horse, by a jerk of one rein, when he refuses to turn.

EBRIO'SITY, ē-brē-ôs'ē-tē. n. s. [ebriositas, Lat.] Habitual drunkenness.

That religion which excuseth Noah in surprisal, will neither acquit ebriosity nor ebriety in their intended perversion. Brown.

EBULLI'TION, ēb-ûl-lish'ûn.[177] n. s. [ebullio, Lat.]

1. The act of boiling up with heat.
2. Any intestine motion.

The dissolution of gold and silver disagree; so that in their mixture there is great ebullition, darkness, and, in the end, a precipitation of a black powder. Bacon.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emication; as also a crasse and fumid exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua fortis. Brown.

3. That struggling or effervescence which arises from the mingling together any alkalizate and acid liquor; any intestine violent motion of the parts of a fluid, occasioned by the struggling of particles of different properties. Quincy.

When aqua fortis, or spirit of vitriol, poured upon filings of iron, dissolves the filings with a great heat and ebullition, is not the heat and ebullition effected by a violent motion of the parts; and does not their motion argue, that the acid parts of the liquor rush towards the parts of the metal with violence, and run forcibly into its pores, till they get between its outmost particles and the main mass of the metal? Newton.

A violent cold, as well as heat, may be produced by this ebullition; for if sal ammoniack, or any pure volatile alkali, dissolved in water, be mixed with an acid, an ebullition, with a greater degree of cold, will ensue. Arbuthnot.

ECCE'NTRICAL, ĕk-sĕn'trĕ-kăl. } adj.
ECCE'NTRICK, ĕk-sĕn'trĭk. } [eccentricus, Lat.]

1. Deviating from the centre.
2. Not having the same centre with another circle: such circles were supposed by the Ptolemaick philosophy.

Astronomers, to solve the phænomena, framed to their conceit eccentricks and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs. Bacon.

Thither his course he bends
Through the calm firmament; but up or down,
By centrick or eccentrick, hard to tell. Milton.

They build, unbuild, contrive,
To save appearances; they gird the sphere
With centrick and eccentrick, scribbl'd o'er,
Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton.

Whence is it that planets move all one and the same way in orbs concentrick, while comets move all manner of ways in orbs very eccentrick. Newton.

3. Not terminating in the same point; not directed by the same principle.

Whatsoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentrick to the ends of his master. Bacon.

4. Irregular; anomalous; deviating from stated and constant methods.

This motion, like others of the times, seems eccentrick and irregular. King Charles.

A character of an eccentrick virtue, is the more exact image of human life, because it is not wholly exempted from its frailties. Dryden.

Then from whate'er we can to sense produce,
Common and plain, or wond'rous and abstruse,
From nature's constant or eccentrick laws,
The thoughtful soul this gen'ral inference draws,
That an effect must presuppose the cause. Prior.

ECCENTRI'CITY, ĕk-sĕn-trĭs'ĕ-tē. n. s. [from eccentrick.]

1. Deviation from a centre.
2. The state of having a different centre from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the epicycle wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is unequal. Brown.

By reason of the sun's eccentricity to the earth, and obliquity to the equator, he appears to us to move unequally. Holder.

3. Excursion from the proper orb.

The duke at his return from his eccentricity, for so I account favourites abroad, met no good news. Wotton.

4. Eccentricity of the earth is the distance between the focus and the centre of the earth's elliptick orbit. Harris.

ECCHY'MOSIS, ĕk-kē-mō'sĭs.[520] n. s. [ἐκχυμωσις.] Livid spots or blotches in the skin, made by extravasated blood. Quincy.

Ecchymosis may be defined an extravasation of the blood in or under the skin, the skin remaining whole. Wiseman.

Laxations are accompanied with tumour and ecchymosis. Wiseman.

ECCLESIA'STICAL, ĕk-klē-zhē-ăs'tē-kăl. }
ECCLESIA'STICK, ĕk-klē-zhē-ăs'tĭk. } adj. [ecclesiasticus, Lat.] Relating to the church; not civil.

Is discipline an ecclesiastical matter or civil? If an ecclesiastical, it must belong to the duty of the ministers. Hooker.

Clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons are liberal of those which they find in ecclesiastical writers. Swift.

A church of Englandman has a true veneration for the scheme established among us of ecclesiastick government. Swift.

ECCLESIA'STICK, ĕk-klē-zhē-ăs'tĭk. n. s. [from the adjective.] A person dedicated to the ministries of religion.

The ambition of the ecclesiasticks destroyed the purity of the church. Burnet.

ECCOPRO'TICKS, ĕk-kō-prōt'ĭks. n. s. [ἔκ and κοπρος.] Such medicines as gently purge the belly, so as to bring away no more than the natural excrements lodged in the intestines.

The body ought to be maintained in its daily excretions by such means as are eccoprotick. Harvey

ECHINA'TE, ē-kĭ-nāte'. } adj. [from
ECHINA'TED, ē-kĭ-nā'tĕd. } echinus, Lat.] Bristled like a hedge-hog; set with prickles.

An echinated pyrites in shape approaches the echinated chrystalline balls. Woodward.

E'CHINUS, ē-kī'nŭs.[503] n. s. [Latin.]

1. A hedge-hog.
2. A shellfish set with prickles.
3. [With botanists.] The prickly head, cover of the seed, or top of any plant.
4. [In architecture.] A member or ornament, taking its name from the roughness of the carving, resembling the prickly rind of a chesnut, and not unlike the thorny coat of a hedge-hog.

This ornament is used by modern architects in cornices of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders; and generally set next to the abacus, being carved with anchors, darts, and ovals or eggs. Harris.

E'CHO, ĕk'kō. n. s. [ηχω; echo, Lat.]

1. Echo was supposed to have been once a nymph, who pined into a sound for love of Narcissus.

The pleasant myrtle may teach the unfortunate Echo
In these woods to resound the renowned name of a goddess. Sidney.

2. The return or repercussion of any sound.

The sound, filling great spaces in arched lines, cannot be guided; therefore there hath not been any means to make artificial echoes. Bacon.

3. The sound returned.

Babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once. Shaksp.

Wilt thou hunt?
Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from their hollow earth. Shaksp.

O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales and bow'rs!
With other echo late I taught your shades
To answer, and resound far other song! Milton.

To you I mourn, nor to the deaf I sing;
The woods shall answer, and the echo ring. Pope.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The sound must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.

To E'CHO, ĕk'kō. v. n.

1. To resound; to give the repercussion of a voice.

At the parting
All the church echo'd. Shaksp.

Through rocks and caves the name of Delia sounds;
Delia each cave and echoing rock rebounds. Pope.

2. To be sounded back.

Hark, how the sound disturbs imperious Rome!
Shakes her proud hills, and rolls from dome to dome!
Her mitr'd princes hear the echoing noise,
And, Albion, dread thy wrath and awful voice. Blackmore.

To E'CHO, ĕk'kō. v. a. To send back a voice; to return what has been uttered.

Our separatists do but echo the same note. Decay of Piety.

With peals of shouts the Tyrians praise the song.
Those peals are echo'd by the Trojan throng. Dryden.

One great death deforms the dreary ground?
The echo'd woes from distant rocks resound. Prior.

ECLAIRCI'SSEMENT, ĕk-klāre'sĭz-mĕnt. n. s. [French.] Explanation; the act of clearing up an affair by verbal expostulation.

The eclaircissement ended in the discovery of the informer. Clarendon.

ECLA'T, ē-klāw'.[472] n. s. [French.] Splendour; show; lustre.

Nothing more contributes to the variety, surprize, and eclat of Homer's battles, than that artificial manner of gaging his heroes by each other. Pope.

ECLE'CTICK, ĕk-lĕk'tĭk. adj. [εκλέκτικος.] Selecting; choosing at will.

Cicero was of the eclectick sect, and chose out of each such positions as came nearest truth. Watts.

ECLE'GMA, ĕk-klĕg'mă. n. s. [ἔκ and λείχειν.] A form of medicine made by the incorporation of oils with syrups, and which is to be taken from a liquorice stick. Quincy.

ECLI'PSE, ē-klĭps'. n. s. [ἔκλειψις.]

1. An obscuration of the luminaries of heaven: the sun is eclipsed by the intervention of the moon; the moon by the interposition of the earth. The word originally signifies departure from the place, to which Milton alludes.

Slips of yew,
Silver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shaksp.

Planets, planet-struck, real eclipse
Then suffer'd. Milton.

So though the sun victorious be,
And from a dark eclipse set free,
The influence, which we fondly fear,
Afflicts our thoughts the following year. Waller.

An eclipse of the moon is when the atmosphere of the earth, between the sun and the moon, hinders the light of the sun from falling upon and being reflected by the moon: if the light of the sun is kept off from the whole body of the moon, it is a total eclipse; if from a part only, it is a partial one. Locke.

2. Darkness; obscuration.

All the posterity of our first parents suffered a perpetual eclipse of spiritual life. Raleigh.

Experience we have of the vanity of human glory, in our scatterings and eclipses. King Ch.

To ECLI'PSE, ê-klips'. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken a luminary.

Let the eclipsed moon her throne resign. Sandys.

Now if the earth were flat, the darken'd moon
Would seem to all eclips'd as well as one. Creech.

2. To extinguish; to put out.

Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon. Shaksp.

3. To cloud; to obscure.

They had seen tokens of more than common greatness, howsoever now eclips'd with fortune. Sidney.

Praise him to his father:—
—Let the prince's glory
Seem to eclipse, and cast a cloud on his. Denham.

Let other muses write his prosp'rous fate,
Of conquer'd nations tell, and kings restor'd;
But mine shall sing of his eclips'd estate,
Which, like the sun's, more wonders does afford. Dryden.

He descended from his father, and eclips'd the glory of his divine majesty with a veil of flesh. Calamy.

4. To disgrace.

She told the king that her husband was eclips'd in Ireland by the no-countenance his majesty had shewed towards him. Clarendon.

Another now hath to himself engross'd
All power, and us eclipsed. Milton.

ECLI'PTICK, ê-klip'tik. n. s. [εκλειπτικος.] A great circle of the sphere, supposed to be drawn through the middle of the zodiack, and making an angle with the equinoctial in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23° 30′, which is the sun's greatest declination. This is by some called via solis, or the way of the sun, because the sun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line. This line is drawn on the globe: but in the new astronomy the ecliptick is that part among the fixed stars, which the earth appears to describe to an eye placed in the sun, as in its annual motion it runs round the sun from west to east. If you suppose this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve signs. Harris.

All stars that have their distance from the ecliptick northwards not more than twenty-three degrees and a half, may in progression of time, have declination southward, and move beyond the equator. Brown.

The terraqueous globe had the same site and position, in respect of the sun, that it now hath: its axis was not parallel to that of the ecliptick, but inclined in like manner as it is at present. Woodw.

You must conceive an imaginary plane, which, passing through the centre of the sun and the earth, extends itself on all sides as far as the firmament: this plane is called the ecliptick, and in this the centre of the earth is perpetually carried, without any deviation. Bentley.

ECLI'PTICK, ê-klip'tik. adj. Described by the ecliptick line.

The earth's rotation makes the night and day:
The sun revolving through th' ecliptick way,
Effects the various seasons of the year. Blackmore

E'CLOGUE, êk'lôg.[338] n. s. [εκλογη.] A pastoral poem, so called because Virgil called his pastorals eclogues.

What exclaiming praises Basilius gave this eclogue any man may guess, that knows love is better than spectacles to make every thing seem great. Sidney.

It is not sufficient that the sentences be brief, the whole eclogue should be so too. Pope.

ECONO'MICK, êk-kô-nôm'ik.[530] } adj.
ECONO'MICAL, êk-kô-nôm'ê-kâl. }
[from economy.]

1. Pertaining to the regulation of a household.

Her quick'ning power in every living part,
Doth as a nurse, or as a mother serve;
And doth employ her economick art,
And busy care, her household to preserve. Davies.

In economical affairs, having proposed the government of a family, we consider the proper means to effect it. Watts.

2. Frugal.

Some are so plainly economical, as even to desire that the seat be well watered, and well fewelled. Wotton.

ECO'NOMY, ê-kôn'ô-mê.[296] n. s. [οἰκονομια. This word is often written, from its derivation oeconomy; but oe being no diphthong in English, it is placed here with the authorities for different orthography.]

1. The management of a family; the government of a household.

By St. Paul's economy the heir differs nothing from a servant, while he is in his minority; so a servant should differ nothing from a child in the substantial part. Taylor.

2. Distribution of expense.

Particular sums are not laid out to the greatest advantage in his economy; but are sometimes suffered to run waste, while he is only careful of the main. Dryden.

3. Frugality; discretion of expense; laudable parsimony.

I have no other notion of economy, than that it is the parent of liberty and ease. Swift.

4. Disposition of things; regulation.

All the divine and infinitely wise ways of economy that God could use towards a rational creature, oblige mankind to that course of living which is most agreeable to our nature. Hammond.

5. The disposition of arrangement of any work.

In the Greek poets, as in Plautus, we see the economy and disposition of poems better observed than in Terence. Ben Jonson.

If this economy must be observed in the minutest parts of an epick poem, what soul, though sent into the world with great advantages of nature, cultivated with the liberal arts and sciences, can be sufficient to inform the body of so great a work? Dryd.

6. System of matter; distribution of every thing active or passive to its proper place.

These the strainers aid,
That by a constant separation made,
That may a due economy maintain,
Exclude the noxious parts, the good retain. Blackm.

ECPHRA'CTICKS. êk-frâk'tiks. n. s. [εκ and φρατιω.] Such medicines as render tough humours more thin, so as to promote their discharge. Quincy.

Procure the blood a free course, ventilation, and transpiration, by suitable purges and ecphractick medicines. Harvey.

E'CSTASY, êks'tâ-sê. n. s. [εκστασις.]

1. Any passion by which the thoughts are absorbed, and in which the mind is for a time lost.

Follow them swiftly,
And hinder them from what this ecstasy
May now provoke them to. Shaksp.

'T may be
No longer joy there, but an ecstasy. Suckling.

Whether what we call ecstasy be not dreaming with our eyes open, I leave to be examined. Locke.

2. Excessive joy; rapture.

O, love, be moderate! allay thy ecstasy! Shaksp.

The religious pleasure of a well-disposed mind moves gently, and therefore constantly: it does not affect by rapture and ecstasy; but is like the pleasure of health, still and sober. South.

Each delighted, and delighting gives
The pleasing ecstasy which each receives. Prior.

A pleasure which no language can express;
An ecstasy, that mothers only feel,
Plays round my heart. Philips.

3. Enthusiasm; excessive elevation and absorption of the mind.

He lov'd me well, and oft would beg me sing;
Which when I did, he on the tender grass
Would sit and hearken even to ecstasy. Milton.

4. Excessive grief or anxiety. This is not now used.

Sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems
A modern ecstasy. Shaksp.

Better be with the dead,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. Shaksp.

5. Madness; distraction. This sense is not now in use.

Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled out of tune, and harsh,
That unmatch'd form, and feature of blown youth,
Blasted with ecstasy. Shaksp.

E'CSTASIED, êks'tâ-sîd.[282] adj. [from ecstasy.] Ravished; filled with enthusiasm.

These are as common to the inanimate things as to the most ecstasied soul upon earth. Norris.

ECSTA'TICAL, êks-tât'ê-kâl. } adj. [εκστατικος.]
ECSTA'TICK, êks-tât'ik.[509] }

1. Ravished; rapturous; elevated beyond the usual bounds of nature.

There doth my soul in holy vision sit,
In pensive trance, and anguish, and ecstatick fit. Milton.

When one of them, after an ecstatical manner, fell down before an angel, he was severely rebuked, and bidden to worship God. Stillingfleet.

In trance ecstatick may thy pangs be drown'd;
Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee round. Pope.

2. Raised to the highest degree of joy.

To gain Pescennius one employs his schemes;
One grasps a Cecrops in ecstatick dreams. Pope.

3. Tending to external objects. This sense is, I think, only to be found once, though agreeable enough to the derivation.

I find in me a great deal of ecstatical love, which continually carries me out to good without myself. Norris.

E'CTYPE, êk'tipe. n. s. [εκτυπος.] A copy.

The complex ideas of substances are ectypes, copies, but not perfect ones; not adequate. Locke.

EDA'CITY, ê-dâs'ê-tê. n. s. [edacitas, Lat.]

Voracity; ravenousness; greediness; rapacity.

The wolf is a beast of great edacity and digestion: it may be the parts of him comfort the bowels. Bacon

To E'DDER, ĕd'dûr. v. a. [probably from edge.] To bind or interweave a fence. Not in use.

To add strength to the hedge, edder it; which is, bind the top of the stakes with some small long poles on each side. Mortimer.

E'DDER, ĕd'dûr.[98] n. s. [from the verb.] Such fencewood as is commonly put upon the top of fences. Not in use.

In lopping and felling, save edder and stake,
Thine hedges, as needeth, to mend or to make.
Tusser.

E'DDY, ĕd'dė. n. s. [ed, backward again, and ea, water, Sax.]

1. The water that by some repercussion, or opposite wind, runs contrary to the main stream.

My praises are as a bulrush upon a stream: if they sink not, 'tis because they are born up by the strength of the current, which supports their lightness; but they are carried round again, and return on the eddy where they first began. Dryden.

2. Whirlpool; circular motion.

The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in,
And smiling eddies dimpled on the main. Dryden.
So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away.
Addison.

E'DDY, ĕd'dė. adj. Whirling; moving circularly.

And chaff with eddy winds is whirl'd around,
And dancing leaves are lifted from the ground.
Dryden.

EDGE, ĕdje. n. s. [ecge, Saxon.]

1. The thin or cutting part of a blade.

Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o' th' sword
His wife, his babes. Shaksp.
He that will a good edge win,
Must forge thick, and grind thin. Proverb.
The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Shaksp.
'Tis slander,
Whose edge is sharper than the sword. Shaksp.

2. A narrow part arising from a broader.

Some harrow their ground over, and then plow it upon an edge. Mortimer.

3. Brink; margin; extremity.

The rays which pass very near to the edges of any body, are bent a little by the action of the body. Newton.

We have, for many years, walked upon the edge of a precipice, while nothing but the slender thread of human life has held us from sinking into endless misery. Rogers.

Yes, the last pen for freedom let me draw,
When truth stands trembling on the edge of law.
Pope.

4. Sharpness of mind; proper disposition for action or operation; intenseness of desire.

Give him a further edge,
And drive his purpose into these delights. Shaksp.

But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd,
When want had set an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,
And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Creech.
Silence and solitude set an edge upon the genius, and cause a greater application. Dryden.

5. Keenness; acrimony of temper.

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord!
That would reduce these bloody days again. Shak.

A harsh grating tune setteth the teeth on edge.
Bacon.

To EDGE, ĕdje. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sharpen; to enable to cut.

There sat she rolling her alluring eyes,
To edge her champion's sword, and urge my ruin.
Dryden.

2. To furnish with an edge.

I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case;
So wondrous hard, and so secure of wound,
It made my sword, though edg'd with flint rebound.
Dryden.

3. To border with any thing; to fringe.

Their long descending train,
With rubies edg'd, and sapphires, swept the plain.
Dryden.

I rid over hanging hills, whose tops were edged with groves, and whose feet were water'd with winding rivers. Pope.

4. To exasperate; to embitter.

By such reasonings the simple were blinded; and the malicious edged. Hayward.

He was indigent and low in money, which perhaps might have a little edged his desperation. Wotton.

5. To put forward beyond a line.

Edging by degrees their chairs forwards, they were in a little time got up close to one another. Locke.

To EDGE, ĕdje. v. n. [perhaps from eð, backward, Saxon.] To move forward against any power; going close upon a wind, as if upon its skirts or border, and so sailing slow.

I must edge upon a point of wind,
And make slow way. Dryden.

E'DGED, ĕdjd.[369] participial adj. [from edge.] Sharp; not blunt.

We find that subtile or edged quantities do prevail over blunt ones. Digby.

E'DGELESS, ĕdje'lĕs. adj. [from edge.] Blunt; obtuse; unable to cut.

To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword; despair and die. Shak.
They are edgeless weapons it hath to encounter.
Decay of Piety.

E'DGETOOL, ĕdje'tōōl. n. s. [edge and tool.] A tool made sharp to cut.

There must be no playing with things sacred; no jesting with edgetools. L'Estrange.
Nurses from their children keep edgetools.
Dorset.

I shall exercise upon steel, and its several sorts; and what sort is fittest for edgetools, which for springs. Moxon.

E'DGEWISE, ĕdje'wize. adv. [edge and wise.] With the edge put into any particular direction.

Should the flat side be objected to the stream, it would be soon turned edgewise by the force of it. Ray.

E'DGING, ĕd'jing. n. s. [from edge.]

1. What is added to any thing by way of ornament.

The garland which I wove for you to wear,
And border'd with a rosy edging round Dryden.
A woman branches out into a long dissertation upon the edging of a petticoat. Addison.

Some of the fungus kind, gathered for edible mushrooms, have produced a difficulty of breathing. Arbuthnot.

The edible creation decks the board. Prior.

E'DICT, ė'dikt. n. s. [edictum, Lat.] A proclamation of command or prohibition; a law promulgated.

When an absolute monarch commandeth his subjects that which seemeth good in his own discretion, hath not his edict the force of a law? Hooker.

The great King of kings
Hath in the table of his law commanded
That thou shalt do no murder; will you then
Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's. Shaksp.
Severe decrees may keep our tongues in awe,
But to our thoughts what edict can give law? Dryd.
The ministers are always preaching, and the governours putting out edicts, against gaming and fine cloaths. Addison.

EDIFICA'TION, ĕd-ė-fė-kà'shŭn. n. s. [edificatio, Lat.]

1. The act of building up a man in the faith; improvement in holiness.

Our blessed Saviour told us, that we must account for every idle word, not meaning that every word not designed for edification, or less prudent, shall be reckoned for a sin. Taylor.

2. Improvement; instruction.

Out of these magazines I shall supply the town with what may tend to their edification. Addison.

E'DIFICE, ĕd'ė-fis.[142] n. s. [ædificium, Lat.] A fabrick; a building; a structure.

My love was like a fair house built on another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it. Shaksp.
God built
So spacious, and his line stretch'd out so far,
That man may know he dwells not in his own;
An edifice too large for him to fill. Milton.
The edifice, where all were met to see him,
Upon their heads and on his own he pull'd. Milt.
As Tuscan pillars owe their original to this country, the architects always give them a place in edifices raised in Tuscany. Addison.
He must be an idiot that cannot discern more strokes of workmanship in the structure of an animal, than in the most elegant edifice. Bentley.

E'DIFIER, ĕd'ė-fi-ûr. n. s. [from edify.] One that improves or instructs another.

To E'DIFY, ĕd'ė-fi. v. a. [edifico, Lat.]

1. To build.

There was a holy chapel edify'd,
Wherein the hermit wont to say
His holy things each morn and eventide. Spenser.
Men have edify'd
A lofty temple, and perfum'd an altar to thy name.
Chapman.

2. To instruct; to improve.

He who speaketh no more than edifieth, is undeservedly reprehended for much speaking. Hooker.
Men are edified, when either their understanding is taught somewhat whereof, in such actions, it behoveth all men to consider, or when their hearts are moved with any affection suitable thereunto. Hooker.
Life is no life, without the blessing of a friendly and an edifying conversation. L'Estrange.
He gave, he taught; and edify'd the more,

Because he shew'd, by proof, 'twas easy to be poor. Dryden.

3. To teach; to persuade. This is now either obsolete or ludicrous.

You shall hardly edify me, that those nations might not, by the law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had only policy and moral virtue. Bacon.

E'DILE, ê'dîle.[140] n. s. [ædilis, Lat.] The title of a magistrate in old Rome, whose office seems in some particulars to have resembled that of our justices of peace.

The edile, ho! let him be apprehended. Shak.

EDI'TION, ê-dish'ûn. n. s. [editio, Lat.]

1. Publication of any thing, particularly of a book.

This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition upon the same ground. Bacon.

2. Republication: generally with some revisal or correcting.

These are of the second edition. Shaksp.

The business of our redemption is, to rub over the defaced copy of the creation, to reprint God's image upon the soul, and to set forth nature in a second and a fairer edition. South.

I cannot go so far as he who published the last edition. Dryden.

The Code, composed hastily, was forced to undergo an emendation, and to come forth in a second edition. Baker.

E'DITOR, êd'ê-tûr.[166] n. s. [editor, Latin.] Publisher; he that revises or prepares any work for publication.

When a different reading gives us a different sense, or a new elegance in an author, the editor does very well in taking notice of it. Addison.

This nonsense got into all the editions by a mistake of the stage editors. Pope.

To E'DUCATE, êd'jû-kâte.[91] v. a. [educo, Lat.] To breed; to bring up; to instruct youth.

Their young succession all their cares employ;
They breed, they brood, instruct and educate,
And make provision for the future state. Dryden.

Education is worse, in proportion to the grandeur of the parents; if the whole world were under one monarch, the heir of that monarch would be the worst educated mortal since the creation. Swift.

EDUCA'TION, êd-jû-kâ'shûn. n. s. [from educate.] Formation of manners in youth; the manner of breeding youth; nurture.

Education and instruction are the means, the one by use, the other by precept, to make our natural faculty of reason both the better and the sooner to judge rightly between truth and error, good and evil. Hooker.

All nations have agreed in the necessity of a strict education, which consisted in the observance of moral duties. Swift.

To EDU'CE, ê-dûse'. v. a. [educo, Lat.] To bring out; to extract; to produce from a state of occultation.

That the world was educed out of the power of space, give that as a reason of its original; in this language, to grow rich, were to educe money out of the power of the pocket. Glanville.

This matter must have lain eternally confined to its beds of earth, were there not this agent to educe it thence. Woodward.

Th' eternal art educes good from ill,
Grafts on this passion our best principle. Pope

EDU'CTION, ê-dûk'shûn. n. s. [from educe.] The act of bringing any thing into view.

To EDU'LCORATE, ê-dûl'kô-râte. v. a. [from dulcis, Lat.] To sweeten. A chymical term.

1. To destroy any thing painted, or carved.

2. To make no more legible or visible; to blot out; to strike out.

Characters on dust, the first breath of wind effaces. Locke.

It was ordered, that his name should be effaced out of all publick registers. Addison.

Time, I said, may happily efface
That cruel image of the king's disgrace. Prior.

Otway fail'd to polish or refine,
And fluent Shakspeare scarce effac'd a line. Pope.

3. To destroy; to wear away.

Nor our admission shall your realm disgrace,
Nor length of time our gratitude efface. Dryden.

EFFE'CT, êf-fêkt'.[98] n. s. [effectus, Lat.]

1. That which is produced by an operating cause.

You may see by her example, in herself wise, and of others beloved; that neither folly is the cause of vehement love, nor reproach the effect. Sidney.

Effect is the substance produced, or simple idea introduced into any subject, by the exerting of power. Locke.

We see the pernicious effects of luxury in the ancient Romans, who immediately found themselves poor as soon as this vice got footing among them. Addison.

2. Consequence; event.

No man, in effect, doth accompany with others, but he learneth, ere he is aware, some gesture, or voice, or fashion. Bacon.

To say of a celebrated piece that there are faults in it, is, in effect, to say that the author of it is a man. Addison.

3. Purpose; meaning; general intent.

They spake to her to that effect. 2 Chron.

4. Consequence intended; success; advantage.

Christ is become of no effect unto you. Gal.

He should depart only with a title, the effect whereof he should not be possessed of, before he deserved it. Clarendon.

The institution has hitherto proved without effect, and has neither extinguished crimes, nor lessened the numbers of criminals. Temple.

5. Completion; perfection.

Not so worthily to be brought to heroical effect by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Æneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidney.

Semblant art shall carve the fair effect,
And full atchievement of thy great designs. Prior.

6. Reality; not mere appearance.

In shew, a marvellous indifferently composed senate ecclesiastical was to govern, but in effect one only man should, as the spirit and soul of the residue, do all in all. Hooker.

State and wealth, the business and the crowd,
Seems at this distance but a darker cloud;
And is to him, who rightly things esteems,
No other in effect than what it seems. Denham.

7. [In the plural.] Goods; moveables.

What form of prayer
Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murther!
That cannot be, since I am still possest
Of those effects for which I did the murther,
My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen. Shakspeare.

The emperor knew that they could not convey away many of their effects. Addison.

To EFFE'CT, êf-fêkt'. v. a. [efficia, Lat.]

1. To bring to pass; to attempt with success; to achieve; to accomplish as an agent.

Being consul, I doubt not t' effect
All that you wish. Ben Jonson.

2. To produce as a cause.

The change made of that syrup into a purple colour, was effected by the vinegar. Boyle.

EFFE'CTIBLE, êf-fêk'tê-bl. adj. [from effect.] Performable; practicable; feasible.

That a pot full of ashes will still contain as much water as it would without them, is not effectible upon the strictest experiment. Brown.

EFFE'CTIVE, êf-fêk'tîv. adj. [from effect.]

1. Having the power to produce effects; efficacious; effectual: with of.

They are not effective of any thing, nor leave no work behind them. Bacon.

If any mystery, rite, or sacrament be effective of any spiritual blessings, then this much more, as having the prerogative and principality above every thing else. Taylor.

There is nothing in words and stiles but suitableness, that makes them acceptable and effective. Glanville.

2. Operative; active; having the quality of producing effects.

Nor do they speak properly who say that time consumeth all things; for time is not effective, nor are bodies destroyed by it. Brown.

3. Producing effects; efficient.

Whosoever is an effective real cause of doing his neighbour wrong is criminal, by what instrument soever he does it. Taylor.

4. Having the power of operation; useful: as, effective men in an army.

EFFE'CTIVELY, êf-fêk'tîv-lê. adv. [from effective.] Powerfully; with real operation.

This effectively resists the devil, and suffers us to receive no hurt from him. Taylor.

EFFE'CTLESS, êf-fêkt'lês. adj. [from effect.] Without effect; impotent; useless; unmeaning.

I'll chop off my hands;
In bootless prayer have they been held up,
And they have served me to effectless use. Shaksp.

EFFE'CTOR, êf-fêk'tûr.[166] n. s. [effector, Lat.]

1. He that produces any effect; performer.

2. Maker; creator.

We commemorate the creation, and pay worship

to that infinite Being who was the effector of it. Derham.

EFFE'CTUAL, êf-fêk'tshû-âl.[463] adj. [effectuel, Fr.]

1. Productive of effects; powerful to a degree adequate to the occasion; operative; efficacious.

The reading of scripture is effectual, as well to lay even the first foundation, as to add degrees of farther perfection, in the fear of God. Hooker.

The communication of thy faith may become effectual, by the acknowledging of every good thing. Philemon.

2. Veracious; expressive of facts. A sense not in use.

Reprove my allegation, if you can;
Or else conclude my words effectual. Shaksp.

EFFE'CTUALLY, êf-fêk'tshû-âl-lê. adv. [from effectual.] In a manner productive of the consequence intended; efficaciously.

Sometimes the sight of the altar, and decent preparations for devotion, may compose and recover the wandering mind more effectually than a sermon. South.

A subject of that vast latitude, that the strength of one man will scarcely be sufficient effectually to carry it on. Woodward.

To EFFE'CTUATE, êf-fêk'tshû-âte. v. a. [effectuer, Fr.] To bring to pass; to fulfil.

He found means to acquaint himself with a nobleman, to whom discovering what he was, he found him a fit instrument to effectuate his desire. Sidney.

EFFE'MINACY, êf-fêm'ê-nâ-sê. n. s. [from effeminate.]

1. Admission of the qualities of a woman; softness; unmanly delicacy; mean submission.

But foul effeminacy held me yok'd
Her bond slave: O indignity, O blot
To honour and religion! Milton.

2. Lasciviousness; loose pleasure.

So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and effeminacy are prevented. Taylor.

EFFE'MINATE, êf-fêm'ê-nâte.[91] adj. [effeminatus, Lat.]

1. Having the qualities of a woman; womanish; soft to an unmanly degree; voluptuous; tender; luxurious: of persons.

The king, by his voluptuous life and mean marriage, became effeminate, and less sensible of honour. Bacon.

2. Resembling the practice of a woman; womanish: of things.

After the slaughter of so many peers,
Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace? Shaksp.
From man's effeminate slackness it begins,
Who should better hold his place. Milton.
The more effeminate and soft his life,
The more his fame to struggle to the field. Dryden.

3. Womanlike; soft; without reproach. A sense not in use.

As well we know your tenderness of heart,
And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse. Shaksp.

To EFFE'MINATE, êf-fêm'ê-nâte.[91 98] v. a. [effemino, Lat.] To make womanish; to weaken; to emasculate; to unman.

When one is sure it will not corrupt or effeminate children's minds, and make them fond of trifles, I think all things should be contrived to their satisfaction. Locke.

To EFFE'MINATE, êf-fêm'ê-nâte. v. n. To grow womanish; to weaken; to melt into weakness.

In a slothful peace both courage will effeminate and manners corrupt. Pope.

EFFEMINA'TION, êf-fêm-ê-nâ'shûn. n. s. [from effeminate.] The state of one grown womanish; the state of one emasculated or unmanned.

Vices the hare figured: not only feneration, or usury, from its fecundity and superfetation, but degenerate effemination. Bacon.

To EFFERVE'SCE, êf-fêr-vês'. v. n. [effervesco, Lat.] To generate heat by intestine motion.

The compound spirit of nitre, put to oil of cloves, will effervesce even to a flame. Mead.

EFFERVE'SCENCE, êf-fêr-vês'sênse.[510] n. s. [from efferveo, Lat.] The act of growing hot; production of heat by intestine motion.

In the chymical sense, effervescence signifies an intestine motion, produced by mixing two bodies together that lay at rest before; attended sometimes with a hissing noise, frothing, and ebullition. Arbuthnot.

Take chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it: put it into strong spirit of nitre, till it becomes sweetish, and makes no effervescence upon the injection of the chalk. Grew.

Hot springs do not owe their heat to any colluctation or effervescence of the minerals in them, but to subterranean heat or fire. Woodward.

EFFE'TE, êf-fête'. adj. [effætus, Lat.]

1. Barren; disabled from generation.

It is probable that females have in them the seeds of all the young they will afterwards bring forth, which, all spent and exhausted, the animal becomes barren and effete. Ray.

In most countries the earth would be so parched and effete by the drought, that it would afford but one harvest. Bentley.

2. Worn out with age.

All that can be allowed him now, is to refresh his decrepit, effete sensuality, with the history of his former life. South.

EFFICA'CIOUS, êf-fê-kâ'shûs. adj. [efficax, Lat.] Productive of effects; powerful to produce the consequence intended.

A glowing drop with hollow'd steel
He takes, and, by one efficacious breath,
Dilates to cube or square. Philips.

EFFICA'CIOUSLY, êf-fê-kâ'shûs-lê. adv. [from efficacious.] Effectually; in such a manner as to produce the consequence desired.

If we find that any other body strikes efficaciously enough upon it, we cannot doubt but it will move that way in which the striking body impels it. Digby.

E'FFICACY, êf'fê-kâ-sê. n. s. [from efficax, Lat.] Power to produce effects; production of the consequence intended.

Whatsoever is spoken concerning the efficacy or necessity of God's word, they tie and restrain only into sermons. Hooker.

Whether if they had tasted the tree of life before that of good and evil, they had suffered the curse of mortality; or whether the efficacy of the one had not overpowered the penalty of the other, we leave it unto God. Brown.

Efficacy is a power of speech which represents a thing, by presenting to our minds the lively ideas or forms. Peacham.

The apostle tells us of the success and efficacy of the gospel upon the minds of men; and, for this reason, he calls it the power of God unto salvation. Tillotson.

The arguments drawn from the goodness of God, have a prevailing efficacy to induce men to repent. Rogers.

EFFI'CIENCE, êf-fîsh'yênse. } [98] n. s. [from EFFI'CIENCY, êf-fîsh'yên-sê. }
efficio, Lat.] The act of producing effects; agency.

The manner of this divine efficiency being far above us, we are no more able to conceive by our reason, than creatures unreasonable by their sense are able to apprehend after what manner we dispose and order the course of our affairs. Hooker.

That they are carried by the manuduction of a rule, is evident; but what that regulating efficiency should be, is not easily determined. Glanville.

Sinning against conscience has no special productive efficiency of this particular sort of sinning, more than of any other. South.

A pious will is the means to enlighten the understanding in the truth of christianity upon the account of a natural efficiency: a will so disposed, will engage the mind in a severe search. South.

Gravity does not proceed from the efficiency of any contingent and unstable agents; being entirely owing to the direct concourse of the power of the Author of nature. Woodward.

EFFI'CIENT, êf-fîsh'yênt. n. s. [efficio, Lat.]

1. The cause which makes effects to be what they are.

God, which moveth meer natural agents as an efficient only, doth otherwise move intellectual creatures, and especially his holy angels. Hooker.

2. He that makes; the effector.

Observations of the order of nature carry the mind up to the admiration of the great efficient of the world. Hale.

EFFI'CIENT, êf-fîsh'yênt.[113] adj. Causing effects; that makes the effect to be what it is.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. Collier.

To EFFI'GIATE, êf-fîj'ê-âte. v. a. [effigio, Lat.] To form in semblance; to image.

EFFIGIA'TION, êf-fîj-ê-â'shûn. n. s. [from effigiate.] The act of imaging, or forming the resemblance of things or persons. Dict.

E'FFIGY, êf'fê-jê. } effigy is from being in effigy.] Resemblance; image in painting or sculpture; representation; idea.

We behold the species of eloquence in our minds, the effigies or actual image of which we seek in the organs of our hearing. Dryden.

Observe those numerous wrongs in effigy,
The gods have saved from the devouring sea. Garth.

EFFLORE'SCENCE, êf-flô-rês'sênse. } [510] n.
EFFLORE'SCENCY, êf-flô-rês'sên-sê. } s. [efflouresco, Lat.]

1. Production of flowers.

Where there is less heat, there the spirit of the plant is digested, and severed from the grosser juice in efflorescence. Bacon.

2. Excrescencies in the form of flowers.

Two white sparry incrustations, with efflorescencies in form of shrubs, formed by the trickling of water. Woodward.

3. [In physick.] The breaking out of some humours in the skin, in distempers called exanthematous; as in the measles, and the like. Quincy.

A wart beginneth in the cutis, and seemeth to be an efflorescence of the serum of the blood. Wiseman.

EFFLORE'SCENT, êf-flô-rês'sênt. adj [efflouresco, Lat.] Shooting out in form of flowers.

Yellow efflorescent sparry incrustations on stone. Woodward.

EFFLU'ENCE, ĕf'flŭ-ĕnse. n. s. [effluo, Lat.] That which issues from some other principle.

Bright effluence of bright essence increate. Milton.

These scintillations are not the ascension of the air upon the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflammable effluences discharged from the bachs collided. Brown.

From the bright effluence of his deed
They borrow that reflected light,
With which the lasting lamp they feed,
Whose beams dispel the damps of envious night. Prior.

EFFLU'VIA, ĕf-flŭ'vē-ă. } n. s. [from
EFFLU'VIUM, ĕf-flŭ'vē-ŭm. } effluo, Lat.]

Those small particles which are continually flying off from bodies; the subtilty of which appears from their being able, a long time together, to produce very sensible effects, without any sensible diminution of the body from whence they arise. Quincy.

If the earth were an electrick body, and the air but the effluvium thereof, we might believe that from attraction, and by effluxion, bodies tended to the earth. Brown.

Neither the earth's diurnal revolution upon its axis, nor any magnetick effluvia of the earth, nor the air, or atmosphere, which environs the earth, can produce gravity. Woodward.

If these effluvia, which do upward tend;
Because less heavy than the air, ascend;
Why do they ever from their height retreat,
And why return to seek their central seat?
Blackmore.

E'FFLUX, ĕf'flŭks.[402] n. s. [effluxus, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing out.

Through the copious efflux of matter through the orifice of a deep ulcer, he was reduced to a skeleton. Harvey.

2. Effusion; flow.

The first efflux of men's piety, after receiving of the faith, was the selling and consecrating their possessions. Hammond.

3. That which flows from something else; emanation.

Prime chearer, light!
Of all material beings first and best!
Efflux divine! Thomson.

4. The act of flowing is more properly effluence, and that which flows more properly efflux.

To EFFLU'X, ĕf-flŭks'.[98] v. n. [effluo, Lat.] To run out; to flow away. This is not often in use.

Five thousand and some odd centuries of years are effluxed since the creation. Boyle.

EFFLU'XION, ĕf-flŭk'shŭn. n. s. [effluxum, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing out.

By effluxion and attraction bodies tend towards the earth. Brown.

2. That which flows out; effluvium; emanation.

There are some light effluxions from spirit to spirit, when men are one with another; as from body to body. Bacon.

To EFFO'RCE, ĕf-fōrse'. v. a. [efforcer, Fr.]

1. To force; to break through by violence.

In all that room was nothing to be seen,
But huge great iron chests and coffers strong,
All barr'd with double bonds that ne'er could ween
Them to efforce by violence or wrong. Fairy Queen.

2. To force; to ravish; to violate by force.

Then 'gan her beauty shine as brightest sky,
And burnt his beastly heart t' efforce her chastity.
Spenser.

3. To strain; to exert with effort or vehemence. This word is not now used.

The palmer lent his ear into the noise,
To wheet who called so importunely;
Again he heard a more efforced voice,
That bade him come in haste. Spenser.

To EFFO'RM, ĕf-fōrm'. v. n. [efformo, Lat.] To make in any certain manner; to shape; to fashion.

Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing, and efforming us after thy own image. Taylor.

EFFORMA'TION, ĕf-fōr-mā'shŭn. n. s. [from efform.] The act of fashioning or giving form to.

Nature begins to set upon her work of efformation. More.

They pretend to solve phænomena, and to give an account of the production and efformation of the universe. Ray.

E'FFORT, ĕf'fōrt. n. s. [effort, Fr.] Struggle; strain; vehement action; laborious endeavour.

If, after having gained victories, we had made the same efforts as if we had lost them, France could not have withstood us. Addison.

Though the same sun, with all diffusive rays,
Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We prize the stronger effort of his pow'r,
And always set the gem above the flow'r. Pope.

EFFO'SSION, ĕf-fōsh'ŭn. n. s. [effodio, Lat.] The act of digging up from the ground; deterration.

He set apart annual sums for the recovery of manuscripts, the effossion of coins, and the procuring of mummies. Arbuthnot.

EFFRAI'ABLE, ĕf-frā'ă-bl. adj. [effroyable, Fr.] Dreadful; frightful; terrible. A word not used.

Pestilential symptoms declare nothing a proportionate efficient of their effraiable nature but arsenical fumes. Harvey.

EFFRO'NTERY, ĕf-frŭn'tĕr-ē. n. s. [effronterie, Fr.] Impudence; shamelessness; contempt of reproach.

They could hardly contain themselves within one unworthy act, who had effrontery enough to commit or countenance it. King Charles.

Others with ignorance and insufficiency have self-admiration and effrontery to set up themselves. Watts.

A bold man's effrontery, in company with women, must be owing to his low opinion of them, and his high one of himself. Clarissa.

To EFFU'LGE, ĕf-fŭlje'. v. n. [effulgio, Lat.] To send forth lustre or effulgence. I know not that this word is used.

The topaz charms the sight,
Like these effulging yellow streams of light. Savage.

EFFU'LGENCE, ĕf-fŭl'jĕnse.[177 98] n. s. [effulgio, Lat.] Lustre; brightness; clarity; splendour.

On thee
Impress'd, th' effulgence of his glory abides. Milt.
Thy lustre, blest effulgence can dispel
The clouds of errour, and the gloom of hell.
Blackmore.

EFFU'LGENT, ĕf-fŭl'jĕnt. adj. [effulgens, Lat.] Shining; bright; luminous.

How soon th' effulgent emanations fly
Through the blue gulph of interposing sky!
Blackmore.

The downward sun
Looks out effulgent, from amid' the flash
Of broken clouds. Thomson.

EFFUMABI'LITY, ĕf-fū-mă-bĭl'ĕ-tē. n. s. [fumus, Lat.] The quality of flying away, or vapouring in fumes. An useful word, but not adopted.

They seem to define mercury by volatility, or, if I may coin such a word, effumability. Boyle.

To EFFU'SE, ĕf-fūze'.[437] v. a. [effusus, Lat.] To pour out; to spill; to shed.

He fell, and deadly pale,
Groan'd out his soul, with gushing blood effus'd.
Milton.

At last emerging from his nostrils wide,
And gushing mouth, effus'd the briny tide. Pope.

EFFU'SE, ĕf-fūze'. n. s. [from the verb.] Waste; effusion. Not used.

The air hath got into my deadly wounds,
And much effuse of blood doth make me faint.
Shaksp.

EFFU'SION, ĕf-fū'zhŭn.[98] n. s. [effusio, Lat.]

1. The act of pouring out.

My heart hath melted at a lady's tears,
Being an ordinary inundation;
But this effusion of such manly drops,
This show'r, blown up by tempest of the soul,
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd.
Shaksp.

Our blessed Lord commanded the representation of his death, and sacrifice on the cross, should be made by breaking bread and effusion of wine. Taylor.

If the flood-gates of heaven were any thing distinct from the forty days rain, their effusion, 'tis likely, was at this same time when the abyss was broken open. Burnet.

2. Waste; the act of spilling or shedding.

When there was but as yet one only family in the world, no means of instruction, human or divine, could prevent effusion of blood. Hooker.

Stop effusion of our christian blood,
And 'stablish quietness. Shaksp.

Yet shall she be restor'd, since public good,
For private int'rest ought not to be withstood,
To save th' effusion of my people's blood. Dryden.

3. The act of pouring out words.

Endless and senseless effusions of indigested prayers, oftentimes disgrace, in a most insufferable manner, the worthiest part of christian duty towards God. Hooker.

4. Bounteous donation.

Such great force the gospel of Christ hath then upon men's souls, melting them into that liberal effusion of all that they had. Hammond.

5. The thing poured out.

Purge me with the blood of my Redeemer, and I shall be clean; wash me with that precious effusion, and I shall be whiter than snow. King Charles.

EFFU'SIVE, ĕf-fū'sĭv.[499 428] adj. [from effuse.] Pouring out; dispersing.

The north-east spends its rage; th' effusive south
Warms the wide air. Thomson.

EFT, ĕft. n. s. [ɐpeꝛa, Sax.] A newt; an evet: a small kind of lizard that lives generally in the water.

Peacocks are beneficial to the places where they are kept, by clearing of them from snakes, adders, and efts, upon which they will live. Mortimer.

The crocodile of Egypt is the lizard of Italy, and the eft in our country. Nichols.

EFT, ĕft. adv. [ɐpꝛ, Sax.] Soon; quickly; speedily; shortly. Obsolete.

Ef through the thick they heard one rudely rush
With noise whereof he from his lofty steed
Down fell to ground, and crept into a bush,
To hide his coward head from dying dread.
Fairy Queen.

Quite consum'd with flame
The idol is of that eternal maid;

For so at least I have preserv'd the same,
With hands profane, from being eft betray'd.
Fairfax.

E'FTSOONS, ĕft-sôônz'. adv. [ɐfꝛ and ꝛoon.] Soon afterward; in a short time; again. An obsolete word; formed, as it seems, by the conjunction of two words of the same meaning.

He in their stead eftsoons, placed Englishmen, who possessed all their lands. Spenser.

Eftsoons the nymphs, which now had flowers their fill,
Run all in haste to see that silver brood. Spenser.

The Germans deadly hated the Turks, whereof it was to be thought that new wars should eftsoons ensue. Knolles.

Eftsoons, O sweetheart kind, my love repay,
And all the year shall then be holiday. Gay.

E. G. [exempli gratia.] For the sake of an instance or example.

E'GER, ē'gûr. n. s. [See EAGRE.] An impetuous or irregular flood or tide.

From the peculiar disposition of the earth at the bottom, wherein quick excitations are made, may arise those egers and flows in some estuaries and rivers, as is observable about Trent and Humber in England. Brown.

To EGE'ST, ē-jĕst'. v. a. [egero, Lat.] To throw out food at the natural vents.

Divers creatures sleep all the winter; as the bear, the hedge-hog, the bat, and the bee; these all wax fat when they sleep, and egest not. Bacon.

EGE'STION, ē-jĕs'tshŭn.[464] n. s. [egestus, Lat.] The act of throwing out the digested food at the natural vents.

The animal soul or spirits manage as well their spontaneous actions, as the natural or involuntary exertions of digestion, egestion, and circulation. Hale.

EGG, ĕg. n. s. [ɐȝ, Saxon; ough, Erse.]

1. That which is laid by feathered, and some other animals, from which their young is produced.

An egg was found having lain many years at the bottom of a moat, where the earth had somewhat overgrown it; and this egg was come to the hardness of a stone, and the colours of the white and yolk perfect. Bacon.

Eggs are perhaps the highest, most nourishing, and exalted of all animal food, and most indigestible. Arbuthnot.

2. The spawn or sperm of other creatures.

Therefore think him as the serpent's egg,
Which hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischievous. Shaksp.

Ev'ry insect of each different kind,
In its own egg, chear'd by the solar rays,
Organs involv'd and latent life displays. Blackmore.

3. Any thing fashioned in the shape of an egg.

There was taken a great glass-bubble with a long neck, such as chymists are wont to call a philosophical egg. Boyle.

To EGG, ĕg. v. a. [eggia, to incite, Islandick; ɐȝȝian, Sax.] To incite; to instigate; to provoke to action: for this, edge is, I think, sometimes ignorantly used.

Study becomes pleasant to him who is pursuing his genius, and whose ardour of inclination eggs him forward, and carrieth him through every obstacle. Derham.

E'GLANTINE, ĕg'lân-tîn.[150] n. s. [esglantier, Fr.] A species of rose; sweetbriar.

O'er canopied with luscious woodbine,
With sweet musk roses, and with eglantine. Shak.

The leaf of eglantine, not to slander,
Out-sweetened not thy breath. Shaksp.

Sycamore with eglantine were spread,
A hedge about the sides, a covering over head.
Dryden.

E'GOTISM, ē'gō-tĭzm.[511 530 536] n. s. [from ego, Lat.] The fault committed in writing by the frequent repetition of the word ego or I; too frequent mention of a man's self in writing or conversation.

The most violent egotism, which I have met with, in the course of my reading, is that of cardinal Wolsey's; ego et rex meus, I and my king. Spect.

E'GOTIST, ē'gō-tĭst. n. s. [from ego.] One that is always repeating the word ego, I; a talker of himself.

A tribe of egotists, for whom I have always had a mortal aversion, are the authors of memoirs, who are never mentioned in any works but their own. Spectator.

To E'GOTIZE, ē'gō-tīze. v. n. [from ego.] To talk much of one's self.

EGRE'GIOUS, ē-grē'jē-ŭs. adj. [egregius, Lat.]

1. Eminent; remarkable; extraordinary.

He might be able to adorn this present age, and furnish history with the records of egregious exploits both of art and valour. Moore.

One to empire born;
Egregious prince; whose manly childhood shew'd
His mingled parents, and portended joy
Unspeakable. Philips.

An egregious and pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity. Woodward.

2. Eminently bad; remarkably vitious. This is the usual sense.

We may be bold to conclude, that these last times, for insolence, pride, and egregious contempt of all good order, are the worst. Hooker.

Ah me, most credulous fool!
Egregious murtherer! Shaksp.

And hence th' egregious wizzard shall foredoom
The fate of Louis and the fall of Rome. Pope.

EGRE'GIOUSLY, ē-grē'jē-ŭs-lē. adv. [from egregious.] Eminently; shamefully.

Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me,
For making him egregiously an ass,
And practising upon his peace and quiet
Even to madness. Shaksp.

He discovered that, besides the extravagance of every article, he had been egregiously cheated. Arbuthnot.

E'GRESS, ē'grĕs. n. s. [egressus, Lat.] The power or act of going out of any place; departure.

Gates of burning adamant,
Barr'd over us, prohibit all egress. Milton.

This water would have been locked up within the earth, and its egress utterly debarred, had the strata of stone and marble remained continuous. Woodward.

EGRE'SSION, ē-grĕsh'ŭn. n. s. [egressio, Lat.] The act of going out.

The vast number of troops is expressed in the swarms; their tumultuous manner of issuing out of their ships, and the perpetual egression, which seemed without end, are imaged in the bees pouring out. Pope.

E'GRET, ē'grĕt. n. s. A fowl of the heron kind, with red legs. Bailey.

E'GRIOT, ē'grē-ŏt. n. s. [aigret, French; perhaps from aigre, sour.] A species of cherry.

The cœur-cherry, which inclineth more to white, is sweeter than the red; but the egriot is more sour. Bacon.

To EJA'CULATE, ē-jăk'ū-lāte. v. a. [ejaculor, Lat.] To throw; to shoot; to dart out.

Being rooted so little way in the skin, nothing near so deeply as the quills of fowls, they are the more easily ejaculated. Grew.

The mighty magnet from the centre darts
This strong, though subtle force, through all the parts:
Its active rays, ejaculated thence,
Irradiate all the wide circumference. Blackmore.

EJACULA'TION, ē-jăk-ū-lā'shŭn. n. s. [from ejaculate.]

1. The act of darting or throwing out.

There seemeth to be acknowledged, in the act of envy, an ejaculation or irradiation of the eye. Bacon.

There is to be observed, in those dissolutions which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are: as the ebullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon.

2. A short prayer darted out occasionally, without solemn retirement.

In your dressing let there be ejaculations fitted to the several actions of dressing; as at washing your hands, pray God to cleanse your soul from sin. Taylor.

EJA'CULATORY, ē-jăk'ū-lā-tŭr-ē. adj. [from ejaculate.]

1. Suddenly darted out; uttered in short sentences.

The continuance of this posture might incline to ease and drowsiness; they used it rather upon some short ejaculatory prayers, than in their larger devotions. Duppa.

2. Sudden; hasty.

We are not to value ourselves upon the merit of ejaculatory repentances, that take us by fits and starts. L'Estrange.

To EJE'CT, ē-jĕkt'. v. a. [ejicio, ejectum, Lat.]

1. To throw out; to cast forth; to void.

Infernal lightning sallies from his throat!
Ejected sparks upon the billows float! Sandys.

The heart, as said, from its contracted cave,
On the left side ejects the bounding wave. Blackmore.

Tears may spoil the eyes, but not wash away the affliction; sighs may exhaust the man, but not eject the burthen. South.

2. To throw out or expel from an office or possession.

It was the force of conquest; force with force
Is well ejected, when the conquer'd can. Milton.

The French king was again ejected when our king submitted to the church. Dryden.

2. To expel; to drive away; to dismiss with hatred.

We are peremptory to dispatch
This viperous traitor; to eject him hence
Were but our danger; and to keep him here,
Our certain death; therefore it is decreed
He dies to-night. Shaksp.

4. To cast away; to reject;

To have ejected whatsoever the church doth make account of, be it never so harmless in itself, and of never so ancient continuance, without any other crime to charge it with, than only that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, could not have been defended. Hooker.

Will any man say, that if the words whoring and drinking were by parliament ejected out of the English tongue, we should all awake next morning chaste and temperate. Swift.

EJE'CTION, ē-jĕk'shŭn. n. s. [ejectio, Lat.]

1. The act of casting out; expulsion.

These stories are founded on the ejection of the fallen angels from heaven. Broome.

2. [In physick.] The discharge of any thing by vomit, stool, or any other emunctory. Quincy.

EJE'CTMENT, ė-jėkt'mėnt. n. s. [from eject.] A legal writ by which any inhabitant of a house, or tenant of an estate, is commanded to depart.

EIGH, åy. interj. An expression of sudden delight.

EIGHT, åyt. adj. [eaꝑꝯa; Saxon; ahta, Gothick; acht, Scotish.] Twice four. A word of number.

This island contains eight score and eight miles in circuit. Sandy's Journey.

EIGHTH, åyt*th*. adj. [from eight.] Next in order to the seventh; the ordinal of eight.

Another yet?—A seventh! I'll see no more;
And yet the eighth appears. Shaksp.

In the eighth month should be the reign of Saturn. Bacon.

I stay reluctant seven continued years,
And water her ambrosial couch with tears;
The eighth she voluntarily moves to part,
Or urg'd by Jove, or her own changeful heart. Pope

EI'GHTEEN, åy'tėėn. adj. [eight and ten.] Twice nine.

He can't take two from twenty, for his heart,
And leave eighteen. Shaksp.

If men naturally lived but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about eighteen: and yet eighteen years now are as long as eighteen years would be then. Taylor.

EI'GHTEENTH, åy'tėėn*th*. adj. [from eighteen.] The next in order to the seventeenth; twice ninth.

In the eighteenth year of Jereboam died Abijam. 1 Kings.

EI'GHTFOLD, åyt'fōld. adj. [eight and fold.] Eight times the number or quantity.

EI'GHTHLY, åyt*th*'lė. adv. [from eighth.] In the eighth place.

Eighthly, living creatures have voluntary motion, which plants have not. Bacon.

EI'GHTIETH, åy'tė-ė*th*. adj. [from eighty.] The next in order to the seventy-ninth; eighth tenth.

Some balances are so exact as to be sensibly turned with the eightieth part of a grain. Wilkins.

EI'GHTSCORE, åyt'skōre. adj. [eight and score.] Eight times twenty; a hundred and sixty.

What! keep a week away? seven days and nights?
Eightscore eight hours? and lovers absent hours,
More tedious than the dial eightscore times?
Oh weary reckoning! Shaksp.

EI'GHTY, åy'tė. adj. [eight and ten.] Eight times ten; fourscore.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen. Shaksp.

Among all other climactericks three are most remarkable; that is, seven times seven, or forty-nine; nine times nine, or eighty-one; and seven times nine, or the year sixty-three, which is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown.

EIGNE, åne. adj. [aisne, Fr.] In law, it denotes the eldest or first-born. Here it signifies unalienable, as being entailed.

It happeneth not seldom, that, to avoid the yearly oath, for averment of the continuance of some estate for life, which is eigne, and not subject to forfeiture for the alienation that cometh after it, the party will offer to sue for a pardon uncompelled before the time; in all which, some mitigation of the uttermost value may well and worthily be offered. Bacon.

EI'SEL, ė'sil. n. s [eꝑil, Sax.] Vinegar; verjuice; any acid. An old word.

Cast in thy mind
How thou resemblest Christ, as with sowre poison,
If thou paine thy taste; remember therewithall,
How Christ for thee tasted eisel and gall. More.

EI'THER, ė'thůr. pron. [æꝯðeꝛ, Saxon; auther, Scotish.]

1. Whichsoever of the two; whether one or the other.

Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves
Nor either cares for him. Shaksp.

So like in arms these champions were,
As they had been a very pair:
So that a man would almost swear,
That either had been either. Drayton's Nymp.

Goring made a fast friendship with Digby, either of them believing he could deceive the other. Clarendon.

I do not ask whether bodies do so exist, that the motion of one body cannot really be without the motion of another; to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.

2. Each; both.

In the process of natural beings, there seem some to be creatures placed, as it were, on the confines of several provinces, and participating something of either. Hale.

Sev'n times the sun has either tropick view'd,
The winter banish'd, and the spring renew'd.
Dryden's Virgil.

3. It is used sometimes of more than two; any one of a certain number.

4. Any of an indeterminate number, as in the following passage:

Henry VIII. Francis I. and Charles V. were so provident, as scarce a palm of ground could be gotten by either of the three, but that the other two would set the balance of Europe upright again. Bacon.

EI'THER, ė'thůr.[252] adv. [from the noun.] A distributive adverb, answered by or: either the one or the other.

We never heard of any ship that had been seen to arrive upon any shore of Europe; no nor of either the East or West Indies. Bacon.

What perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd? Daniel.

Either your brethren have miserably deceived us, or power confers virtue. Swift to Pope.

EJULA'TION, ėd-jů-lå'shůn. n. s. [ejulatio, Lat.] Outcry; lamentation; moan; wailing.

Instead of hymns and praises, he breaks out into ejulations and effeminate wailings. Government of the Tongue.

With dismal groans
And ejulation, in the pangs of death
Some call for aid. Philips.

EKE, ėke. adv. [eac, Saxon; ook, Dutch.] Also; likewise.

If any strength we have, it is to ill;
But all the good is God's both power and eke will.
Fairy Queen.

Now if 'tis chiefly in the heart
That courage does itself exert,
'Twill be prodigious hard to prove,
That this is eke the throne of love. Prior.

To EKE, ėke. v. a. [eacan, Saxon.]

1. To increase.

I dempt there much to have eked my store,
But such eking hath made my heart sore. Spenser.

The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.
—And mine to eke out her's. Shaksp.

2. To supply; to fill up deficiencies.

Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind.
Shaksp.

Your ornaments hung all
On some patch'd dogholc ek'd with ends of wall.
Pope.

3. To protract; to lengthen.

I speak too long; but 'tis to piece the time,
To eke it, and to draw it out in length,
To stay you from election. Shaksp.

4. To spin out by useless additions. In this sense it seems borrowed from the use of our old poets, who put eke into their lines, when they wanted a syllable.

To ELA'BORATE, ė-låb'ō-råte. v. a. [elaboro, Lat.]

1. To produce with labour.

They in dull joy elaborate a sigh. Young.

2. To heighten and improve by successive endeavours or operations.

The sap is diversified, and still more elaborated and exalted, as it circulates through the vessels of the plant. Arbuthnot.

ELA'BORATE,[91] ė-låb'ō-råte. adj. [elaboratus, Lat.] Finished with great diligence; performed with great labour.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than when politicians most agitate desperate designs. King Charles.

At least, on her bestow'd
Too much of ornament of outward shew
Elaborate; of inward, less exact. Milton.

Man is thy theme, his virtue or his rage
Drawn to the life in each elab'rate page. Waller.

Consider the difference between elaborate discourses upon important occasions delivered to parliaments, and a plain sermon intended for the common people. Swift.

ELA'BORATELY, ė-låb'ō-råte-lė. adv. [from elaborate.] Laboriously; diligently; with great study or labour.

Politick conceptions, so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet prove abortive. South

Some coloured powders, which painters use, may have their colours a little changed, by being very elaborately and finely ground. Newton.

I will venture once to incur the censure of some persons for being elaborately trifling. Bentley.

It is there elaborately shewn, that patents are good. Swift.

ELABORA'TION, ė-låb-ō-rå'shůn. n. s. [from elaborate.] Improvement by successive operations.

To what purpose is there such an apparatus of vessels for the elaboration of the sperm and eggs; such a tedious process of generation and nutrition. Ray.

To ELA'NCE, ė-lånse'. v. a. [elancer, Fr.] To throw out; to dart; to cast as a dart.

While thy unerring hand elanc'd
Another, and another dart, the people
Joyfully repeated Iō! Prior.

Harsh words, that once elanc'd, must ever fly
Irrevocable. Prior.

To ELA'PSE, ė-låpse'. v. n. [elapsus, Lat.] To glide away; to run out without notice.

There is a docible season, a learning time in youth, which suffered to elapse, and no foundation laid, seldom returns. Clarissa.

ELA'STICAL, ė-lås'tė-kål. } adj. [from
ELA'STICK, ė-lås'tik. } ἐλάω.]
Having the power of returning to the form from which it is distorted or withheld; springy; having the power of a spring.

By what elastick engines did she rear
The starry roof, and roll the orbs in air. Blackmore.

If the body is compact, and bends or yields inward to pression, without any sliding of its parts, it is hard and elastick, returning to its figure with a force rising from the mutual attraction of its parts. Newton.

The most common diversities of human constitutions arise from the solids, as to their different degrees of strength and tension; in some being too lax and weak, in others too elastick and strong. Arbuthnot.

A fermentation must be excited in some assignable place, which may expand itself by its elastical power, and break through, where it meets with the weakest resistance. Bentley.

Elasti'city, ê-lâs'tîs-ê-tê. n. s. [from elastick.] Force in bodies, by which they endeavour to restore themselves to the posture from whence they were displaced by any external force. Quincy.

A lute-string will bear an hundred weight without rupture; but at the same time cannot exert its elasticity: take away fifty, and immediately it raiseth the weight. Arbuthnot.

Me emptiness and dulness could inspire,
And were my elasticity and fire. Pope.

Ela'te, ê-lâte'. adj. [elatus, Lat.] Flushed with success; elevated with prosperity; lofty; haughty.

Oh, thoughtless mortals! ever blind to fate!
Too soon dejected, and to soon elate!
I, of mind elate, and scorning fear,
Thus with new taunts insult the monster's ear.
Pope's Odyssey.

To E'late, ê-lâte'. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To elevate with success; to puff up with prosperity.
2. To exult; to heighten. An unusual sense.

Or truth, divinely breaking on his mind,
Elates his being, and unfolds his power. Thomson.

ELATE'RIUM, ê-lâ-tê'rê-ûm. n. s. [Latin.] An inspissated juice, light, of a friable texture and an acid and pungent taste. It is procured from the fruit of a wild cucumber. It is a very violent and rough purge. Hill.

Ela'tion, ê-lâ'shûn. n. s. [from elate.] Haughtiness proceeding from success; pride of prosperity.

God began to punish this vain elation of mind, by withdrawing his favours. Atterbury.

E'lbow, êl'bô.[327] n. s. [elbogꝫa, Saxon.]

1. The next joint or curvature of the arm below the shoulder.

In some fair evening, on your elbow laid,
You dream of triumphs in the rural shade. Pope.

2. Any flexure or angle.

Fruit trees, or vines, set upon a wall between elbows or buttresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall. Bacon.

3. To be at the Elbow. To be near; to be at hand.

Straight will he come;
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home:
Quick, quick; fear nothing, I'll be at thy elbow.
Shakspeare's Othello.

Elbowcha'ir, êl-bô-tshâre'. n. s. [elbow and chair.] A chair with arms to support the elbows.

Swans and elbowchairs, in the opera of Dioclesian, have danced upon the English stage with good success. Gay

E'lbowroom, êl'bô-rôôm. n. s. [elbow and room.] Room to stretch out the elbows on each side; perfect freedom from confinement.

Now my soul hath elbowroom;
It would not out at windows nor at doors. Shaksp.

The natives are not so many, but that there may be elbowroom enough for them, and for the adventives also. Bacon.

A politician must put himself into a state of liberty to provide elbowroom for conscience to have its full play in. South.

To E'lbow, êl'bô. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To push with the elbow.

One elbows him, one jostles in the shole. Dryden.

2. To push; to drive to a distance; to encroach upon.

It thrusts and stretches out,
And elbows all the kingdoms round about. Dryden.

If fortune takes not off this boy betimes,
He'll make mad work and elbow out his neighbours.
Dryden.

To E'lbow, êl'bô. v. n. To jut out in angles.

Eld, êld. n. s. [ealð, Saxon; eld, Scotish.]

1. Old age; decrepitude.

Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd,
As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker eld.
Spenser.

Thy blazed youth
Becomes assuaged, and doth beg the alms
Of palsied eld. Shaksp.

He thought it touch'd his deity full near,
If likewise he some fair one wedded not,
Thereby to wipe away th' infamous blot
Of long uncoupled bed and childless eld. Milton.

2. Old people; persons worn out with years.

They count him of their green-hair'd eld.
Chapman.

E'lder, êl'dûr.[98] n. s. [ellaꝛa, Sax. sambucus.] A tree.

The branches are full of pith, having but little wood: the flowers are monopetalous, divided into several segments, and expand in form of a rose: these are, for the most part, collected into an umbel, and are succeeded by soft succulent berries, having three seeds in each. Miller.

Look for thy reward
Amongst the nettles at the elder tree,
Which overshades the mouth of that same pit.
Shakspeare.

E'lder, êl'dûr.[98] adj. The comparative of eld, now corrupted to old. [ealð, ealdoꝛ, Saxon.] Surpassing another in years; survivor; having the privileges of primogeniture: opposed to younger.

They bring the comparison of younger daughters conforming themselves in attire to their elder sisters. Hooker.

Let still the woman take
An elder than herself; so wears she to him,
So sways she level in her husband's heart. Shaksp.

How I firmly am resolv'd, you know;
That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter
Before I have a husband for the elder. Shaksp.

Among the Lacedemonians, the chief magistrates, as they were, so were they called, elder men. Raleigh.

The elder of his children comes to acquire a degree of authority among the younger, by the same means the father did among them. Temple.

Fame's high temple stands;
Stupendous pile; not rear'd by mortal hands!
Whate'er proud Rome, or artful Greece beheld,
Or elder Babylon, its frame excell'd. Pope.

E'lderly, êl'dûr-lê. adj. [from elder.] No longer young; bordering upon old age.

I have a race of orderly elderly people of both sexes at command, who can bawl when I am deaf, and tread softly when I am giddy. Swift.

E'lders, êl'dûrz. n. s. [from elder.]

1. Persons whose age gives them a claim to credit and reverence.

Rebuke not an elder, but entreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren. 1 Tim.

Our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chase,
Shake off their steril curse. Shaksp.

The blushing youth their virtuous awe disclose,
And from their seats the reverend elders rose. Sandys.

2. Ancestors.

Says the goose, If it will be no better, e'en carry your head as your elders have done before you.
L'Estrange.

I lose my patience, and I own it too,
Where works are censur'd not as bad, but new;
While, if our elders break all reason's laws,
Those fools demand not pardon, but applause. Pope.

3. Those who are older than others.

Many nations are very superstitious and diligent observers of old customs, which they received by continual tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles, in their songs, and by daily use and ensample of their elders. Spenser.

At the board, and in private, it very well becometh children's innocency to pray, and their elders to say Amen. Hooker.

4. [Among the Jews.] Rulers of the people.
5. [In the New Testament.] Ecclesiasticks.
6. [Among presbyterians.] Laymen introduced into the kirk-polity in sessions, presbyteries, synods, and assemblies.

Flea-bitten synod, and assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana; like the rude
Chaos of presbyt'ry, where laymen guide
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side.
Cleveland.

E'ldership, êl'dûr-ship. n. s. [from elder.]

1. Seniority; primogeniture.

The world, while it had scarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and eldership. Raleigh.

That all should Alibech adore, 'tis true;
But some respect is to my birthright due:
My claim to her by eldership I prove. Dryden.

No were the eldership
Of Artaxerxes worth our least of fears,
If Memnon's interest did not prop his cause. Rowe.

2. Presbytery; ecclesiastical senate; kirk-session.

That controversy sprang up between Beza and Erastus, about the matter of excommunications; whether there ought to be in all churches an eldership, having power to excommunicate, and a part of that eldership to be of necessity certain chosen out from amongst the laity. Hooker.

E'ldest, êl'dêst. adj. The superlative of eld, now changed to old. [ealð, ealdoꝛ, ealdoꝛꝛe, Saxon.]

1. The oldest; that has the right of primogeniture.

We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland. Shaksp. Macbeth.

The mother's and her eldest daughter's grace,
It seems, had brib'd him to prolong their space.
Dryden.

2. That has lived most years.

Eldest parents signifies either the oldest men and women that have had children, or those who have longest had issue. Locke.

Elecampa'ne, êl-ê-kâm-pâne'. n. s. [helenium, Latin.] A plant, named also starwort. Botanists enumerate thirty species. Miller.

The Germans have a method of candying elecampane root like ginger, to which they prefer it, and call it German spice. Hill.

To ELE'CT, ê-lekt'. v. a. [electus, Lat.]

1. To choose for any office or use; to take in preference to others.

Henry his son is chosen king though young;
And Lewis of France, elected first beguil'd. Daniel.

This prince, in gratitude to the people, by whose consent he was chosen, elected a hundred senators out of the commoners. Swift.

2. [In theology.] To select as an object of eternal mercy.

ELE'CT, ê-lêkt'. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Chosen; taken by preference from among others.

You have here, lady,
And of your choice, these reverend fathers,
Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembled
To plead your cause. Shakspeare.

2. Chosen to an office, not yet in possession.

The bishop elect takes the oath of supremacy, canonical obedience, and against simony; and then the dean of the arches reads and subscribes the sentences. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. [In theology.] Chosen as an object of eternal mercy.

A vicious liver, believing that Christ died for none but the elect, shall have attempts made upon him to reform and amend his life. Hammond.

Some I have chosen of peculiar grace,
Elect above the rest: so is my will. Milton.

ELE'CTION, ê-lêk'shûn. n. s. [electio, Lat.]

1. The act of choosing; the act of selecting one or more from a greater number for any use or office; choice.

If the election of the minister should be committed to every several parish, do you think that they would choose the meetest? Whitgift.

Him, not thy election,
But natural necessity, begot. Milton.

As charity is, nothing can more increase the lustre and beauty than a prudent election of objects, and a fit application of it to them. Sprat.

2. The power of choice.

For what is man without a moving mind,
Which hath a judging wit, and chusing will?
Now if God's pow'r should her election bind,
Her motions then would cease, and stand all still. Davies.

3. Voluntary preference.

He calls upon the sinners to turn themselves and live; he tells us, that he has set before us life and death, and referred it to our own election which we will chuse. Rogers.

4. Discernment; distinction; discrimination.

The discovery of these colours cannot be done but out of a very universal knowledge of things; which so cleareth men's judgment and election, as it is the less apt to slide into error. Bacon.

In favour, to use men with much difference and election is good: for it maketh those preferred more thankful, and the rest more officious. Bacon.

5. [In theology.] The predetermination of God by which any were selected for eternal life.

The conceit about absolute election to eternal life, some enthusiasts entertaining, have been made remiss in the practice of virtue. Atterbury.

6. The ceremony of a public choice.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality, and popular heat, elections were carried in many places. King Charles.

Since the late dissolution of the club, many persons put up for the next election. Addison.

ELE'CTIVE, ê-lêk'tiv. adj. [from elect.]

1. Regulated or bestowed by election or choice.

I will say positively and resolutely, that it is impossible an elective monarchy should be so free and absolute as an hereditary. Bacon.

The last change of their government, from elective to hereditary, has made it seem hitherto of less force, and unfitter for action abroad. Temple.

2. Exerting the power of choice.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice: whereas all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Grew.

ELE'CTIVELY, ê-lêk'tiv-lê. adv. [from elect.] By choice; with preference of one to another.

How or why that should have such an influence upon the spirits, as to drive them into those muscles electively, I am not subtle enough to discern. Ray.

They work not electively, or upon proposing to themselves an end of their operations. Grew.

ELE'CTOR, ê-lêk'tûr.[98] n. s. [from elect.]

1. He that has a vote in the choice of any officer.

From the new world her silver and her gold
Came, like a tempest, to confound the old;
Feeding with those the brib'd electors' hopes,
Alone she gave us emperors and popes. Waller.

2. A prince who has a voice in the choice of the German emperour.

ELE'CTORAL, ê-lêk'tô-râl. adj. [from elector.] Having the dignity of an elector.

ELE'CTORATE, ê-lêk'tô-râte.[91] n. s. [from elector.] The territory of an elector.

He has a great and powerful king for his son-in-law; and can himself command, when he pleases, the whole strength of an electorate in the empire. Addison.

ELE'CTRE, ê-lêk'tûr.[98 416] n. s. [electrum, Latin.]

1. Amber; which, having the quality, when warmed by friction, of attracting bodies, gave to one species of attraction the name of electricity, and to the bodies that so attract the epithet electrick.

2. A mixed metal.

Change silver plate or vessel into the compound stuff, being a kind of silver electre, and turn the rest into coin. Bacon.

ELE'CTRICAL, ê-lêk'trê-kâl. } adj.
ELE'CTRICK, ê-lêk'trîk. } [from electrum. See ELECTRE.]

1. Attractive without magnetism; attractive by a peculiar property, supposed once to belong chiefly to amber.

By electrick bodies do I conceive not such only as take up light bodies, in which number the ancients only placed jet and amber; but such as, conveniently placed, attract all bodies palpable. Brown.

An electrick body can by friction emit an exhalation so subtile, and yet so potent, as by its emission to cause no sensible diminution of the weight of the electrick body, and to be expanded through a sphere, whose diameter is above two feet, and yet to be able to carry up lead, copper, or leaf-gold, at the distance of above a foot from the electrick body. Newton.

2. Produced by an electrick body.

If that attraction were not rather electrical than magnetical, it was wondrous what Helmont delivered concerning a glass, wherein the magistery of loadstone was prepared, which retained an attractive quality. Brown.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at about a quarter of an inch from the glass, the electrick vapour, excited by friction, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light. Newton.

ELECTRI'CITY, ê-lêk-tris'ê-tê. n. s. [from electrick. See ELECTRE.] A property in some bodies, whereby, when rubbed so as to grow warm, they draw little bits of paper, or such like substances, to them. Quincy.

Such was the account given a few years ago of electricity; but the industry of the present age, first excited by the experiments of Gray, has discovered in electricity a multitude of philosophical wonders. Bodies electrified by a sphere of glass, turned nimbly round, not only emit flame, but may be fitted with such a quantity of the electrical vapour, as, if discharged at once upon a human body, would endanger life. The force of this vapour has hitherto appeared instantaneous, persons at both ends of a long chain seeming to be struck at once. The philosophers are now endeavouring to intercept the strokes of lightning.

ELE'CTUARY, ê-lêk'tshû-âr-ê. n. s. [electarium, Cælius Aurel, which is now written electuary.] A form of medicine made of conserves and powders, in the consistence of honey.

Electuaries made up with honey or syrup, when the consistence is too thin, ferment; and when too thick, candy. By both which the ingredients will be altered or impaired. Quincy.

We meet with divers electuaries, which have no ingredient except sugar, common to any two of them. Boyle.

ELEEMO'SYNARY, êl-ê-môz'ê-nâr-ê. adj. [ἐλεημοσύνη.]

1. Living upon alms; depending upon charity. Not used.

It is little better than an absurdity, that the cause should be an eleemosynary for its subsistence to its effects, as a nature posteriour to and dependent on itself. Glanville.

2. Given in charity. This is the present use.

E'LEGANCE, êl'ê-gânse. } n. s. [elegan-
E'LEGANCY, êl'ê-gân-sê. } tia, Latin.]

1. Beauty rather soothing than striking; beauty without grandeur; the beauty of propriety not of greatness.

St. Augustine, out of a kind of elegancy in writing, makes some difference. Raleigh.

These questions, have more propriety, and elegancy, understood of the old world. Burnet.

2. Any thing that pleases by its nicety. In this sense it has a plural.

My compositions in gardening are altogether Pindarick, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without the nicer elegancies of art. Spec.

E'LEGANT, êl'ê-gânt. adj. [elegans, Latin.]

1. Pleasing by minuter beauties.

Trifles themselves are elegant in him. Pope.

There may'st thou find some elegant retreat. London.

2. Nice; not coarse; not gross.

Polite with candour, elegant with ease. Pope.

E'LEGANTLY, êl'ê-gânt-lê. adv. [from elegant.]

1. In such a manner as to please.

Now read with them those organick arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton.

In a poem elegantly writ,
I will not quarrel with a slight mistake. Roscommon.

2. Neatly; nicely; with minute beauty; with pleasing propriety.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententiously. Bacon.

Whoever would write elegantly, must have regard to the different turn and juncture of every period; there must be proper distances and pauses. Pope.

ELEGI'ACK, êl-ê-ji'âk. adj. [elegiacus, Latin.]

1. Used in elegies.
2. Pertaining to elegies.
3. Mournful; sorrowful.

Let elegiac lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of distant flutes. Gay.

E'LEGY, ĕl'ĕ-jė. n. s. [elegus, Lat.]

1. A mournful song.

He hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies upon brambles, all forsooth deifying the name of Rosalind. Shaksp.

2. A funeral song.

So on Meander's banks, when death is nigh,
The mournful swan sings her own elegy. Dryden.

3. A short poem without points or affected elegancies.

E'LEMENT, ĕl'ĕ-mĕnt. n. s. [elementum, Latin.]

1. The first or constituent principle of any thing.

If nature should intermit her course, those principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made, should lose the qualities which now they have. Hooker.

A man may rationally retain doubts concerning the number of those ingredients of bodies, which some call elements, and others principles. Boyle.

Simple substances are either spirits, which have no manner of composition, or the first principles of bodies, usually called elements, of which other bodies are compounded. Watts.

2. The four elements, usually so called, are earth, fire, air, water, of which our world is composed. When it is used alone, element commonly means the air

The king is but a man: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; and the element shews to him as it doth to me. Shaksp.

My dearest sister fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make
Thy spirits all of comfort. Shaksp.

The king,
Contending with the fretful elements,
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters. Shaksp.

The heavens and the earth shall pass away, and the elements melt with fervent heat. Peter.

Here be four of you, able to make a good world; for you are as differing as the four elements. Bacon.

He from his flaming ship his children sent,
To perish in a milder element. Waller.

3. The proper habitation or sphere of any thing; as water of fish.

We are simple men; we do not know she works by charms, by spells, and such daubry as is beyond our element. Shaksp.

Our torments may, in length of time,
Become our elements. Milton.

They shew that they are out of their element, and that logick is none of their talent. Baker.

4. An ingredient; a constituent part.

Who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?
——One sure that promises no element
In such a business. Shaksp.

5. The letters of any language.

6. The lowest or first rudiments of literature or science.

With religion it fareth as with other sciences; the first delivery of the elements thereof must, for like consideration, be framed according to the weak and slender capacity of young beginners. Hooker.

Every parish should keep a petty schoolmaster, which should bring up children in the first elements of letters. Spenser.

We, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world. Gal.

There is nothing more pernicious to a youth, in the elements of painting, than an ignorant master. Dryden.

To E'LEMENT, ĕl'ĕ-mĕnt. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compound of elements.

Whether any one such body be met with, in those said to be elemented bodies, I now question. Boyle.

2. To constitute; to make as a first principle.

Dull, sublunary, lover's love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

ELEME'NTAL, ĕl-ĕ-mĕn'tăl. adj. [from element.]

1. Produced by some of the four elements.

If dusky spots are varied on his brow,
And streak'd with red, a troubl'd colour show;
That sullen mixture shall at once declare
Winds, rain, and storms, and elemental war. Dryd.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And sip with nymphs their elemental tea. Pope.

2. Arising from first principles.

Leeches are by some accounted poison, not properly, that is by temperamental contrariety, occult form, or so much as elemental repugnancy; but inwardly taken, they fasten upon the veins, and occasion an effusion of blood. Brown.

ELEMENTA'RITY, ĕl-ĕ-mĕn-tăr'ĕ-tė. n. s. [from elementary.] The simplicity of nature, or absence of composition; being uncompounded.

A very large class of creatures in the earth, far above the condition of elementarity. Brown.

ELEME'NTARY, ĕl-ĕ-mĕn'tăr-ė. adj. [from element.]

1. Uncompounded; having only one principle or constituent part.

All rain water contains in it a copious sediment of terrestrial matter, and is not a simple elementary water. Ray.

The elementary salts of animals are not the same as they appear by distillation. Arbuthnot.

2. Initial; rude.

ELE'MI, ĕl-ĕ'mi. n. s.

This drug is improperly called gum elemi, being a resin. The genuine elemi is brought from Æthiopia in flattish masses, or in cylinders, of a yellowish colour. It is very rare in Europe, and supposed to be produced by a tree of the olive kind. The spurious or American elemi, almost the only kind known, is of a whitish colour, with a greater or less greenish or yellowish tinge. It proceeds from a tall tree, which the Brasilians wound, and collect the resin. Hill.

ELE'NCH, ė-lĕnsh'. n. s. [elenchus, Lat.] An argument; a sophism.

The first delusion Satan put upon Eve, and his whole tentation might be the same elench continued, as when he said, Ye shall not die; that was, in his equivocation, you shall not incur present death. Brown.

Discover the fallacies of our common adversary, that old sophister, who puts the most abusive elenchs on us. Decay of Piety.

ELE'OTS, ĕl-ĕ'ŏtz. n. s. Some name the apples in request in the cider countries so; not known by that name in several parts of England. Mortimer.

E'LEPHANT, ĕl'ĕ-fănt. n. s. [elephas, Lat.]

1. The largest of all quadrupeds of whose sagacity, faithfulness, prudence, and even understanding, many surprising relations are given. This animal feeds on hay, herbs, and all sorts of pulse; and is said to be extremely long lifed. He is supplied with a trunk, or long hollow cartilage, which hangs between his teeth, and serves him for hands. His teeth are the ivory. Calmet.

He loves to hear,
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes. Shak.

The elephant hath joints, but not for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shaksp.

2. Ivory; the teeth of elephants.

High o'er the gate, in elephant and gold,
The crowd shall Cæsar's Indian war behold. Dryd.

ELEPHANTI'ASIS, ĕl-ĕ-făn-tė'ă-sis. n. s. [elephantiasis, Lat.] A species of leprosy, so called from covering the skin with incrustations like those on the hide of an elephant.

ELEPHA'NTINE, ĕl-ĕ-făn'tĭn.[140] adj. [elephantinus, Lat.] Pertaining to the elephant.

To E'LEVATE, ĕl'ĕ-văte.[91] v. a. [elevo, Latin.]

1. To raise up aloft.

This subterranean heat or fire, which elevates the water out of the abyss. Woodward.

2. To exalt; to dignify.

3. To raise with great conceptions.

Others apart sat on a hill retir'd,
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high,
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate. Milt.

In all that great extent, wherein the mind wanders, in those remote speculations it may seem to be elevated with, it stirs not beyond sense or reflection. Locke.

Now rising fortune elevates his mind,
He shines unclouded, and adorns mankind. Savage.

4. To elate with vitious pride.

To mischief swift, hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest. Milton.

5. To lessen by detraction. This sense, though legitimately deduced from the Latin, is not now in use.

When the judgments of learned men are alledged against you, what do they but either elevate their credit, or oppose unto them the judgments of others as learned. Hooker.

E'LEVATE, ĕl'ĕ-văte.[91] part adj. [from elevated.] Exalted; raised aloft.

On each side an imperial city stood,
With tow'rs and temples proudly elevate
On seven small hills. Milton.

ELEVA'TION, ĕl-ĕ-vă'shŭn. n. s. [elevatio, Latin.]

1. The act of raising aloft.

The disruption of the strata, the elevation of some, and the depression of others, did not fall out by chance, but were directed by a discerning principle. Woodward.

2. Exaltation; dignity.

Angels, in their several degrees of elevation above us, may be endowed with more comprehensive faculties. Locke.

3. Exaltation of the mind by noble conceptions.

We are therefore to love him with all possible application and elevation of spirit, with all the heart, soul, and mind. Norris.

4. Exaltation of style.

His style was an elegant perspicuity, rich of phrase, but seldom any bold metaphors; and so far from tumid, that it rather wanted a little elevation. Wotton.

5. Attention to objects above us.

All which different elevations of spirits unto God, are contained in the name of prayer. Hooker.

6. The height of any heavenly body with respect to the horizon.

Some latitudes have no canicular days, as those which have more than seventy-three degrees of northern elevation, as Nova Zembla. Brown.

ELEVA'TOR, êl'ê-vâ-tûr.[521 166] n. s. [from elevate.] A raiser or lifter up, applied to some chirurgical instruments put to such uses. Quincy.

ELE'VEN, ê-lêv'vn.[103] adj. [æn̄bleɣen, Saxon.] Ten and one; one more than ten.

Had I a dozen sons, and none less dear than Marcius, I had rather eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shaksp.

ELE'VENTH, ê-lêv'vn*th. adj.* [from eleven.] The next in order to the tenth.

In the eleventh chapter he returns to speak of the building of Babel. Raleigh.

ELF, êlf. n. s. plural elves. [elf, Welsh. Baxter's Gloss.]

1. A wandering spirit supposed to be seen in wild unfrequented places; a fairy.

Through this house give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowsy fire;
Every elf, and fairy sprite,
Hop as light as bird from briar. Shaksp.

Fairy elves,
Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton.

The king of elfs and little fairy queen
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden.

If e'er one vision touch'd thy infant thought,
Of all the nurse and all the priest have taught;
Of airy elves by moon-light shadow seen,
The silver token, and the circled green. Pope.

2. A devil.

That we may angels seem, we paint them elves,
And are but satires to set up ourselves. Dryden.

However it was civil, an angel or elf;
For he ne'er could have fill'd it so well of himself. Swift.

To ELF, êlf. v. a. [from the noun.] To entangle hair in so intricate a manner, that it is not to be unravelled. This the vulgar have supposed to be the work of fairies in the night; and all hair so matted together, hath had the name of elf-locks. Hanmer.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shaksp.

E'LFIN, êl'fîn. adj. [from elf.] Relating to fairies; elfish; belonging to elves.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought,
Unto that elfin knight he bade him fly,
Where he slept soundly. Spenser.

E'LFLOCK, êlf'lôk. n. s. [elf and lock.] Knots of hair twisted by elves.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And cakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,
Which once untangl'd, much misfortune bodes. Shaksp.

To ELI'CITE, ê-lîs'sît. v. a. [elicio, Lat.] To strike out; to fetch out by labour or art.

Although the same truths may be elicited, and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale.

He elicits those acts out of the meer lapsed state of human nature. Cheyne.

ELI'CIT, ê-lîs'sît. adj. [elicitus, Latin.] Brought into act; brought from possibility to real existence.

It is the virtue of humility and obedience, and not the formal elicit act of meekness; meekness being ordinarily annexed to these virtues. Hamm.

The schools dispute whether, in morals, the external action superadds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of the will. South.

ELICITA'TION, ê-lîs-sê-tâ'shûn. n. s. [from elicio, Lat.]

That elicitation which the schools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act: that drawing which they mention, is merely from the appetibility of the object. Bramhall.

To ELI'DE, ê-lîde'. v. a. [elido, Lat.] To break in pieces; to crush.

We are to cut off that whereunto they, from whom these objections proceed, fly for defence, when the force and strength of the argument is elided. Hooker.

ELIGIBI'LITY, êl-ê-jê-bîl'ê-tê. n. s. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen.

The business of the will is not to judge concerning the nature of things, but to choose them in consequence of the report made by the understanding, as to their eligibility or goodness. Fiddes.

E'LIGIBLE, êl'ê-jê-bl.[405] adj. [eligibilis, Lat.] Fit to be chosen; worthy of choice; preferable.

A British ministry ought to be satisfied, if, allowing to every particular man that his private scheme is wisest, they can persuade him, that next to his own plan, that of the government is the most eligible. Addison.

Did they really think, that going on with the war was more eligible for their country than the least abatement of those conditions? Swift.

That the most plain, short, and lawful way to any good end, is more eligible than one directly contrary in some or all of these qualities. Swift.

Certainty, in a deep distress, is more eligible than suspense. Clarissa.

E'LIGIBLENESS, êl'ê-jê-bl-nês. n. s. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen; preferableness.

ELIMINA'TION, ê-lîm-ê-nâ'shûn. n. s. [elimino, Lat.] The act of banishing; the act of turning out of doors; rejection. Dict.

ELI'SION, ê-lîzh'ûn. n. s. [elisio, Lat.]

1. The act of cutting off; as, can't the attempt, there is an elision of a syllable.

You will observe the abbreviations and elisions, by which consonants of most obdurate sounds are joined together, without any softening vowel to intervene. Swift.

2. Division; separation of parts.

The cause given of sound, that it would be an elision of the air, whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean a cutting or dividing, or else an attenuating of the air, is but a term of ignorance. Bacon.

ELIXA'TION, êl-îk-sâ'shûn.[533 530] n. s. [elixus, Lat.] The act of boiling or stewing any thing.

Even to ourselves, and more perfect animals, water performs no substantial nutrition; serving for refrigeration, dilusion of solid aliments, and its elixation in the stomach. Brown.

ELI'XIR, ê-lîk'sûr.[418] n. s. [Arabick.]

1. A medicine made by strong infusion, where the ingredients are almost dissolved in the menstruum, and give it a thicker consistence than a tincture. Quincy.

For when no healing art prevail'd,
When cordials and elixirs fail'd,
On your pale cheek he dropp'd the show'r,
Reviv'd you like a dying flow'r. Waller.

2. The liquor, or whatever it be, with which chymists hope to transmute metals to gold.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befal
Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal. Donne

3. The extract or quintessence of any thing.

In the soul, when the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity infinitely beyond the highest quintessence and elixir of wordly delight. South.

4. Any cordial; or invigorating substance.

What wonder then, if fields and regions here
Breathe forth elixir pure! Milton.

ELK, êlk. n. s. [ælc. Saxon.] A large and stately animal of the stag kind. The neck is short and slender; the ears nine inches in length, and four in breadth. The colour of its coat in winter is greyish, in summer it is paler. The horns of the male are short and thick near the head, where it by degrees expands into a great breadth, with several prominences in its edges. Hill.

And, scarce his head
Rais'd o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk
Lies slumb'ring silent in the white abyss. Thomson.

ELL, êl. n. s. [eln, Sax.]

1. A measure containing forty-five inches, or a yard and a quarter.

They are said to make yearly forty thousand pieces of linen cloth, reckoning two hundred ells to the piece. Addison.

2. It is taken proverbially for a long measure.

Acquit thee bravely, play the man;
Look not on pleasures as they come, but go:
Defer not the last virtue; life's poor span
Makes not an ell by trifling in thy woe. Herbert.

ELLI'PSIS, êl-lîp'sîs. n. s. [ἔλλειψις.]

1. A figure of rhetorick, by which something is left out necessarily to be supplied by the hearer: as, the thing I love, for the thing which I love.

The words are delivered by way of ellipsis, Rom. iv. 18. Hammond.

2. [In geometry.] An oval figure, being generated from the section of a cone, by a plane cutting both sides of the cone, but not parallel to the base, which produces a circle, and meeting with the base when produced. Harris.

On the cylinder inclined, describe an ellipsis, parallel to the horizon. Wilkins.

The planets could not possibly acquire such revolutions in circular orbs, or in ellipses very little eccentrick. Bentley.

ELLI'PTICAL, êl-lîp'tê-kâl. } adj. [from el-
ELLI'PTICK, êl-lîp'tîk. } lipsis.] Having the form of an ellipsis; oval.

Since the planets move in elliptick orbits in one of whose foci the sun is, and by a radius from the sun describe equal areas in equal times, which no other law of a circulating fluid, but the harmonical circulation, can account for; we must find out a law for the paracentrical motion, that may make the orbits elliptick. Cheyne.

In animals, that gather food from the ground, the pupil is oval or elliptical; the greatest diameter going transversely from side to side. Cheyne.

ELM, êlm. n. s. [ulmus, Lat. elm, Sax.]

1. A tree.

The species are, the common rough-leaved elm; the witch hazel, or broad-leaved elm, by some called the British elm; the smooth-leaved or witch elm. Neither of them were originally natives of this country; but they have propagated themselves by seeds and suckers in such plenty as hardly to be rooted out: especially in hedgerows, where there is harbour for their roots. They are very proper to place in hedgerows, upon the borders of fields, where they will thrive better than when planted in a wood or close plantation, and their shade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them; for they may be trained up in form of an hedge, keeping them cut every year, to the height of forty or fifty feet: but they should not be planted too near fruit trees; because the roots of the elm will intermix with the roots of other trees, and deprive them of nourishment. Miller.

The rural seat,
Whose lofty elms and venerable oaks,
Invite the rook, who high amid the boughs,
In early spring, his airy city builds. Thomson.

2. It was used to support vines, to which the poets allude.

Thou art an elm, my husband; I a vine,
Whose weakness married to thy stronger state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicate.
Shakspeare.

ELOCU'TION, ê̆l-ò-kû'shûn. n. s. [elocutio, Lat.]

1. The power of fluent speech.

A travelled doctor of physick, of bold and of able elocution. Wotton.

2. Power of speaking; speech.

Whose taste, too long forborne, at first essay
Gave elocution to the mute, and taught
The tongue not made for speech to speak thy praise.
Milton.

3. The power of expression or diction; eloquence; beauty of words.

The third happiness of his poet's imagination is elocution, or the art of cloathing or adorning that thought so found, and varied, in apt, significant, and sounding words. Dryden.

As I have endeavoured to adorn it with noble thoughts, so much more to express those thoughts with elocution. Dryden.

E'LOGY, ê̆l'ò-jê.[503] n. s. [eloge, Fr.] Praise; panegyrick.

Buckingham lay under millions of maledictions, which at the prince's arrival did vanish into praises and elogies. Wotton.

If I durst say all I know of the elogies received concerning him, I should offend the modesty of our author. Boyle.

Some excellent persons, above my approbation or elogy, have considered this subject. Holder.

To E'LOIGNE, ê̆l'lôîn. v. a. [eloigner, Fr.] To put at a distance; to remove one far from another. Now disused.

From wordly care himself he did eloigne,
And greatly shunned manly exercise. Fairy Queen.

I'll tell thee now dear love! what thou shalt do
To anger destiny, as she doth us;
How I shall stay though she eloigne me thus,
And how posterity shall know it too. Donne.

To ELO'NGATE, ê-lông'gâte. v. a. [from longus, Lat.]

1. To lengthen; to draw out; to protract; to stretch.

2. To put further off.

The first star of Aries in the time of Meton the Athenian, was placed in the very intersection which is now elongated and moved eastward twenty-eight degrees. Brown.

To ELO'NGATE, ê-lông'gâte. v. n. To go off to a distance from any thing.

About Cape Frio in Brasilia, the south point of the compass varieth twelve degrees unto the west; but elongating from the coast of Brasilia, towards the shore of Africa, it varieth eastward. Brown.

ELONGA'TION, ê̆l-ông-gâ'shûn.[533] n. s. [from elongate.]

1. The act of stretching or lengthening itself.

To this motion of elongation of the fibres, is owing the union or conglutination of the parts of the body, when they are separated by a wound. Arbuth.

2. The state of being stretched.

3. [In medicine.] An imperfect luxation, when the ligament of any joint is so extended or relaxed as to lengthen the limb, but yet not let the bone go quite out of its place. Quincy.

Elongations are the effect of an humour soaking upon a ligament, thereby making it liable to be stretched, and to be thrust quite out upon every little force. Wiseman.

4. Distance; space at which one thing is distant from another.

The distant points in the celestial expanse appear to the eye in so small a degree of elongation from another, as bears no proportion to what is real. Glanville.

5. Departure; removal.

Nor then had it been placed in a middle point, but that of descent or elongation. Brown.

To ELO'PE, ê-lôpe'. v. a. [loopen, to run, Dut.] To run away; to break loose; to escape from law or restraint.

It is necessary to treat women as members of the body politick, since great numbers of them have eloped from their allegiance. Addison.

What from the dame can Paris hope?
She may as well from him elope. Prior.

The fool whose wife elopes some thrice a quarter,
For matrimonial solace dies a martyr. Pope.

ELO'PEMENT, ê-lôpe'mênt. n. s. [from elope.] Departure from just restraint; rejection of lawful power: commonly used of a wife.

An elopement is the voluntary departure of a wife from her husband to live with an adulterer, and with whom she lives in breach of the matrimonial vow. Ayliffe.

The negligent husband, trusting to the efficacy of his principle, was undone by his wife's elopement from him. Arbuthnot.

E'LOPS, ê̆'lôps. n. s. [ἔλοψ.] A fish: reckoned however by Milton among the serpents.

Scorpion and asp, and amphisbena dire,
Cerastes horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,
And dipsas. Milton.

E'LOQUENCE, ê̆l'ò-kwênse. n. s. [eloquentia, Lat.]

1. The power of speaking with fluency and elegance; oratory.

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant
More learned than the ears. Shakspeare.

Athens or free Rome, where eloquence
Flourish'd, since mute. Milton.

His infant softness pleads a milder doom,
And speaks with all the eloquence of tears. Heigh.

2. Elegant language uttered with fluency.

Say she be mute, and will not speak a word;
Then I'll commend her volubility,
And say she uttereth piercing eloquence. Shaksp.

Fit words attended on his weighty sense,
And mild persuasion flow'd in eloquence. Pope.

E'LOQUENT, ê̆l'ò-kwênt. adj. [eloquens, Lat.] Having the power of oratory; having the power of fluent and elegant speech.

The Lord of hosts doth take away the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counsellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator. Isaiah.

Oh death! all eloquent, you only prove
What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love.
Pope.

ELSE, êlse. pronoun. [ellep, Sax.] Other; one beside: it is applied both to persons and things.

To stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him. Shakspeare.

Should he or any else search, he will find evidence of the Divine Wisdom. Hale.

He says, 'twas then with him, as now with you;
He did it when he had nothing else to do. Denham.

ELSE, êlse. adv.

1. Otherwise.

Dare not on thy life,
Touch ought of mine beside, by lot my due,
But stand aloof, and think profane to view:
This faulchion, else, not hitherto withstood,
These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood.
Dryden.

What ways are there whereby we should be assured, but either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause? Tillotson.

2. Beside; except that mentioned.

Pleasures which no where else were to be found,
And all Elysium in a spot of ground. Dryden.

3. It has sometimes or before it superfluously.

Be more abstemious,
Or else good night your vow. Shakspeare.

E'LSEWHERE, êlse'hwâre.[397] adv. [else and where.]

1. In any other place.

There are here divers trees, which are not to be found elsewhere. Abbot.

As he proved that Pison was not Ganges, or Gehon, Nilus; so where to find them elsewhere he knew not. Raleigh.

For, if we chance to fix our thoughts elsewhere,
Though our eyes open be, we cannot see. Davies.

Henceforth oracles are ceas'd,
And thou no more with pomp and sacrifice
Shall be enquir'd at Delphos, or elsewhere. Milton.

Although seasoned bodies may and do live near as long in London as elsewhere, yet new-comers and children do not. Graunt.

2. In other places; in some other place.

They which elsewhere complain, that injury is offered to the meanest minister, when the magistrate appointeth him what to wear, think the gravest prelates no competent judges where it is fit for the minister to stand. Hooker.

Let us no more contend, nor blame
Each other, blam'd enough elsewhere. Milton.

Bestow, base man, thy idle threats elsewhere;
My mother's daughter knows not how to fear. Dryd.

If it contradict what he says elsewhere, it is no new or strange thing. Tillotson.

To ELU'CIDATE, ê-lû'sê-dâte. v. a. [elucido, Lat.] To explain; to clear; to make plain.

To elucidate a little the matter, let us consider it. Boyle.

ELUCIDA'TION, ê-lû-sê-dâ'shûn. n. s. [from elucidate.] Explanation; exposition.

We shall, in order to the elucidation of this matter, subjoin the following experiment. Boyle.

ELUCIDA'TOR, ê-lû'sê-dâ-tûr.[521] n. s. [from elucidate.] Explainer; expositor; commentator.

Obscurity is brought over them by the course of ignorance and age, and yet more by their pedantical elucidators. Abbot.

To ELU'DE, ê-lûde'. v. a. [eludo, Lat.]

1. To escape by stratagem; to avoid any mischief or danger by artifice.

Several pernicious vices, notorious among us, escape or elude the punishment of any law yet invented. Swift.

He who looks no higher for the motives of his conduct than the resentments of human justice, whenever he can presume himself cunning enough to elude, rich enough to bribe, or strong enough to resist it, will be under no restraint. Rogers.

2. To mock by an unexpected escape.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

ELU'DIBLE, ê-lû'dê-bl. adj. [from elude.] Possible to be defeated.

There is not any common place more insisted on than the happiness of trials by juries; yet if this blessed part of our law be eludible by power and artifice, we shall have little reason to boast. Swift.

ELVES, êlvz. The plural of elf. See ELF.

Fairy elves
Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton.

Ye sylphs and sylphids to your chief give ear;
Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and demons, hear. Pope.

E'LVELOCK, êlv'lôk. n. s. [from elves and lock.] Knots in the hair superstitiously supposed to be tangled by the fairies.

From the like might proceed the fears of polling elvelocks, or complicated hairs of the head. Brown.

E'LVISH, êl'vish. adj. [from elves, the plural of elf: it had been written more properly elfish.] Relating to elves, or wandering spirits.

Thou elvish markt, abortive, rioting hog!
The slave of nature, and the son of hell! Shaksp.

No muse hath been so bold,
Or of the latter or the old,
Those elvish secrets to unfold,
Which lie from others reading. Drayton.

ELU'MBATED, ê-lûm'bâ-têd. adj. [elumbis, Lat.] Weakened in the loins. Dict.

ELU'SION, ê-lû'zhûn. n. s. [elusio, Lat.] An escape from inquiry or examination; a fraud; an artifice.

An appendix, relating to the transmutation of metals, detects the impostures and elusions of those who have pretended to it. Woodward.

ELU'SIVE, ê-lû'siv.[153] [428] adj. [from elude.] Practising elusion; using arts to escape.

Elusive of the bridal day, she gives
Fond hopes to all, and all with hopes deceives. Pope.

ELU'SORY, ê-lû'sûr-ê.[429] [512] adj. [from elude.] Tending to elude; tending to deceive; fraudulent; deceitful; fallacious.

It may be feared they are but Parthian flights, ambuscade retreats and elusory tergiversation. Brown.

To ELU'TE, ê-lûte'. v. a. [eluo, Lat.] To wash off.

The more oily any spirit is, the more pernicious; because it is harder to be eluted by the blood. Arbuthnot.

To ELU'TRIATE, ê-lû'trê-âte.[91] v. a. [elutrio, Lat.] To decant; or strain out.

The pressure of the air upon the lungs is much less than it has been computed by some; but still it is something, and the alteration of one tenth of its force upon the lungs must produce some difference in elutriating the blood as it passes through the lungs. Arbuthnot.

ELY'SIAN, ê-lîzh'ê-ân.[542] adj. [elysius, Lat.] Pertaining to elysium; pleasant; deliciously soft and soothing; exceedingly delightful.

The river of life, through midst of heaven,
Rolls o'er elysian flowers her amber stream. Milton.

ELY'SIUM, ê-lîzh'ê-ûm. n. s. [Latin.] The place assigned by the heathens to happy souls; any place exquisitely pleasant.

To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth,
So should'st thou either turn my flying soul,
Or I should breath it so into thy body,
And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium. Shakspeare.

'EM, êm. A contraction of them.

For he could coin and counterfeit
New words with little or no wit;
And when with hasty noise he spoke 'em,
The ignorant for current took 'em. Hudibras.

To EMA'CIATE, ê-mâ'shê-âte.[542] v. a. [emacio, Lat.] To waste; to deprive of flesh.

Men after long emaciating diets wax plump, fat, and almost new. Bacon.

All dying of the consumption, die emaciated and lean. Graunt.

To EMA'CIATE, ê-mâ'shê-âte. v. n. To lose flesh; to pine; to grow lean.

He emaciated and pined away in the too anxious enquiry of the sea's reciprocation, although not drowned therein. Brown.

EMACIA'TION, ê-mâ-shê-â'shûn. n. s. [emaciatus, Lat.]

1. The act of making lean.
2. The state of one grown lean.

Searchers cannot tell whether this emaciation or leanness were from a phthisis, or from a hectick fever. Graunt.

EMACULA'TION, ê-mâk-û-lâ'shûn. n. s. [emaculo, Lat.] The act of freeing any thing from spots or foulness. Dict.

E'MANANT, ê'mâ-nânt. adj. [emanans, Lat.] Issuing from something else.

The first act of the divine nature, relating to the world, and his administration thereof, is an emanant act: the most wise counsel and purpose of almighty God terminates in those two great transient or emanant acts or works, the work of creation and providence. Hale.

To E'MANATE, êm'â-nâte.[91] v. n. [emano, Lat.] To issue or flow from something else.

EMANA'TION, êm-mâ-nâ'shûn.[530] n. s. [emanatio, Lat.]

1. The act of issuing or proceeding from any other substance.

Aristotle said, that it streamed by connatural result and emanation from God, the infinite and eternal Mind, as the light issues from the sun. South.

2. That which issues from another substance; an efflux; effluvium.

The experience of those profitable and excellent emanations from God, may be, and commonly are, the first motive of our love. Taylor.

Another way of attraction is delivered by a tenuous emanation, or continued effluvium, which, after some distance, retracteth unto itself; as in syrups, oils, and viscosities, which spun, at length, retire into their former dimensions. Brown.

Such were the features of her heav'nly face:
Her limbs were form'd with such harmonious grace;
So faultless was the frame, as if the whole
Had been an emanation of the soul. Dryden.

The letters, every judge will see, were by no means efforts of the genius, but emanations of the heart. Pope.

Each emanation of his fires
That beams on earth, each virtue he inspires;
Each art he prompts, each charm he can create;
Whate'er he gives, are giv'n for you to hate. Pope.

To EMBA'LM, êm-bâm'.[403] v. a. [embaumer, French; embalsamer, Spanish.] To impregnate a body with aromaticks, that it may resist putrefaction.

Embalm me,
Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me. Shaksp.

I would shew future times
What you were, and teach them t' urge towards such:
Verse embalms virtue, and tombs or thrones of rhymes,
Preserve frail transitory fame as much
As spice doth bodies from corrupt air's touch. Donne.

Muse! at that name thy sacred sorrows shed;
Those tears eternal that embalm the dead. Pope.

EMBA'LMER, êm-bâm'ér.[409] n. s. [from embalm.] One that practises the art of embalming and preserving bodies.

The Romans were not so good embalmers as the Egyptians, so the body was utterly consumed. Bacon.

To EMBA'R, êm-bâr'. v. a. [from bar.]

1. To shut; to enclose.

Themselves for fear into his jaws to fall,
He forc'd to castle strong to take their flight;
Where fast embar'd in mighty brazen wall,
He has them now four years besieg'd to make them thrall. Spenser.

In form of airy members fair embar'd,
His spirits pure were subject to our sight. Fairfax.

2. To stop; to hinder by prohibition; to block up.

Translating the mart unto Calais, he embared all further trade for the future. Bacon.

If this commerce 'twixt heav'n and earth were not
Embar'd, and all this traffick quite forgot,
She for whose loss we have lamented thus,
Would work more fully and pow'rfully on us. Donne.

EMBARCA'TION, ĕm-bär-kā'shŭn. n. s. [from embark.]

1. The act of putting on shipboard.

The French gentlemen were very solicitous for the embarcation of the army, and for the departure of the fleet. Clarendon.

EMBA'SSADRESS, ĕm-bās'să-drĕs. n. s. A woman sent on a public message.

With fear the modest matron lifts her eyes,
And to the bright embassadress replies. Garth.

E'MBASSAGE, ĕm'bās-sāje.[90] } n. s. [It may
E'MBASSY, ĕm'bās-sē. } be observed, that though our authors write almost indiscriminately embassador or ambassador, embassage, or ambassage; yet there is scarcely an example of ambassy, all concurring to write embassy.]

1. A publick message; a message concerning business between princes or states.

Fresh embassy and suits,
Nor from the state nor private friends hereafter,
Will I lend ear to. Shaksp.

When he was at Newcastle he sent a solemn embassage unto James king of Scotland, to treat and conclude a peace with him. Bacon.

The peace polluted thus, a chosen band
He first commissions to the Latian land,
In threat'ning embassy. Dryden.

2. Any solemn message.

He sends the angels on embassies with his decrees. Taylor.

3. An errand, in an ironical sense.

A bird was made fly with such art to carry a written embassage among the ladies, that one might say, If a live bird, how taught? If dead, how made? Sidney.

Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,
Doth not thy embassage belong to me;
And am I last that know it? Shaksp.

To EMBA'TTLE, ĕm-bāt'tl. v. a. [from battle.] To arrange in order or array of battle.

The English are embattled:
To horse! you gallant princes, straight to horse! Shaksp.

I could drive her from the ward of her reputation, her marriage-vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. Shaksp.

On their embattl'd ranks the waves return,
And overwhelm the war! Milton.

Embattl'd nations strive in vain
The hero's glory to restrain:
Streams arm'd with rocks, and mountains red with fire,
In vain against his force conspire. Prior.

To EMBA'TTLE, ĕm-bāt'tl. v. n. To be ranged in battle array.

The night
Is shiny, and they say we shall embattle
By the second hour of the morn. Shaksp.

1. To bathe; to wet; to wash. Not used.

In her lap a little babe did play
His cruel sport;
For in her streaming blood he did embay
His little hands, and tender joints embrew. Fairy Queen.

Every sense the humour sweet embay'd
And, slumb'ring soft, my heart did steal away. Fairy Queen.

2. [from bay.] To enclose in a bay; to land lock.

If that the Turkish fleet
Be not inshelter'd and embay'd, they're drown'd. Shaksp.

To EMBE'LLISH, ĕm-bĕl'lĭsh. v. a. [embellir, Fr.] To adorn; to beautify; to grace with ornaments; to decorate.

How much more beauteous had the fountain been
Embellish'd with her first created green;
Where crystal streams through living turf had run,
Contented with an urn of native stone. Dryden.

The names of the figures that embellished the discourses of those that understood the art of speaking, are not the art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

That which was once the most beautiful spot of Italy, covered with palaces, embellished by emperors, and celebrated by poets, has now nothing to shew but ruins. Addison.

EMBE'LLISHMENT, ĕm-bĕl'lĭsh-mĕnt. n. s. [from embellish.] Ornament; adventitious beauty; decoration; adscititious grace; any thing that confers the power of pleasing.

Cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
The embellishments of life. Addison.

Apparitions, visions, and intercourses of all kinds between the dead and the living, are the frequent and familiar embellishments of the legends of the Romish church. Atterbury.

E'MBERING, ĕm'bŭr-ĭng. n. s. The ember days. A word used by old authors, now obsolete.

For causes good so many ways,
Keep emb'rings well, and fasting days;
What law commands we ought to obey,
For Friday, Saturn, and Wednesday. Tusser.

E'MBERS, ĕm'bŭrz. n. s. without a singular. [æmẏȝia, Saxon, ashes; cinmyria, Islandick, hot ashes or cinders.] Hot cinders; ashes not yet extinguished.

Take hot embers, and put them about a bottle filled with new beer almost to the very neck; let the bottle be well stopped, lest it fly out; and continue it, renewing the embers every day for the space of ten days. Bacon.

If the air will not permit,
Some still removed place will fit,
While glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Milton.

While thus heav'ns highest counsels, by the low
Footsteps of their effects, he trac'd too well,
He tost his troubled eyes, embers that glow
Now with new rage, and wax too hot for hell. Crashaw.

He said, and rose, as holy zeal inspires;
He rakes hot embers, and renews the fires. Dryden.

E'MBERWEEK, ĕm'bŭr-wēēk. n. s. [The original of this word has been much controverted: some derive it from embers or ashes strewed by penitents on their heads: but Nelson decides in favour of Mareschal, who derives it from ymbren or embren, a course or circumvolution.] A week in which an ember day falls.

The ember days at the four seasons are the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after the first Sunday in Lent, the feast of Pentecost, September 14, December 13. Common Prayer.

Stated times appointed for fasting are Lent, and the four seasons of the year called emberweeks. Ayliffe.

To EMBE'ZZLE, ĕm-bĕz'zl. v. a. [This word seems corrupted by an ignorant pronunciation from imbecile.]

EMBLEMA'TICK, ĕm-blĕ-măt'ĭk. } adj. [from emblem.]

1. Comprising an emblem; allusive; occultly representative.

In the well fram'd models,
With emblematick skill and mystick order,
Thou shew'dst where tow'rs on battlements should rise,
Where gates should open, or where walls should compass. Prior.

The poets contribute to the explication of reverses purely emblematical, or when the persons are allegorical. Addison.

2. Dealing in emblems; using emblems.

By tongue and pudding to our friends explain
What does your emblematick worship mean. Prior.

EMBLEMA'TICALLY, ĕm-blĕ-măt'ĕ-kăl-ĕ. adv. [from emblematical.] In the manner of emblems; allusively; with occult representation.

Others have spoken embematically and hierogliphically, as to the Egyptians; and the phœnix was the hierogliphick of the sun. Brown.

He took a great stone, and put it up under the oak, emblematically joining the two great elements of masonry. Swift.

EMBLE'MATIST, ĕm-blĕm'ă-tĭst. n. s. [from emblem.] A writer or inventer of emblems.

These fables are still maintained by symbolical writers, emblematists, and heralds. Brown.

E'MBOLISM, ĕm'bŏ-lĭzm. n. s. [ἔμβολισμος.]

1. Intercalation; insertion of days or years to produce regularity and equation of time.

The civil constitutions of the year were after different manner in several nations; some using the sun's year, but in divers fashions; and some following the moon, finding out embolisms or equations, even to the addition of whole months, to make all as even as they could. Holder.

2. The time inserted; intercalatory time.

E'MBOLUS, ĕm'bŏ-lŭs. n. s. [ἔμβολος.] Any thing inserted and acting in another, as the sucker in a pump.

Our members make a sort of an hydraulick engine, in which a chemical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastick channels by an embolus, like the heart. Arbuthnot.

To EMBO'SS, ĕm-bŏs'. v. a. [from bosse, a protuberance, Fr.]

1. To form with protuberances; to cover with something rising into lumps or bunches.

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Which once a-day, with his embossed froth,
The turbulent surge shall cover. Shaksp.

Thou art a bile,
A plague sore, or embossed carbuncle,
In my corrupted blood. Shaksp.

Botches and blains must all his flesh emboss,
And all his people. Milton.

All crowd in heaps, as at a night-alarm
The bees drive out upon each other's backs,
T' emboss their hives in clusters. Dryden.

2. To engrave with relief, or rising work.

Then o'er the lofty gate his heart emboss'd
Androgeo's death, and off'rings to his ghost. Dryd.

3. [from emboister, French, to enclose in a box.] To enclose; to include; to cover.

The knight his thrilliant spear again essay'd
In his brass-plated body to emboss. Spenser.

A knight her met, in mighty arms emboss'd.
Fairy Queen.

4. [emboscare, Italian.] To enclose in a thicket.

Like that self-begotten bird
In th' Arabian woods embost. Milton.

5. To hunt hard.

When a deer is hard run, and foams at the mouth, he is said to be embost: a dog also when he is strained with hard running, especially upon hard ground, will have his knees swelled, and then he is said to be embost, from bosse, French, a tumour. Hanmer.

Oh, he is more mad
Than Telamon for his shield; the boar of Thessaly
Was never so embost. Shaksp.

We have almost embost him: you shall see his fall to-night. Shaksp.

EMBO'SSMENT, ĕm-bŏs'mĕnt. n. s. [from emboss.]

1. Any thing standing out from the rest; jut; eminence.

I wish also in the very middle, a fair mount, with three ascents, and alleys enough for four to walk a-breast; which I would have to be perfect circles, without any bulwarks or embossments. Bacon.

2. Relief; rising work.

They are at a loss about the word pendentis; some fancy it expresses only the great embossment of the figure, others believe it hung off the helmet in alto relievo. Addison.

To EMBO'TTLE, ĕm-bŏt'tl. v. a. [bouteille, Fr.] To include in bottles; to bottle.

Stirom, firmest fruit,
Embottled long as Priamean Troy
Withstood the Greeks, endures. Philips.

To EMBO'WEL, ĕm-bŏŭ'ĕl. v. a. [from bowel.] To eviscerate; to deprive of the entrails; to extenerate.

The schools,
Embowelled of their doctrine, have left off
The danger to itself. Shaksp.

Embowell'd will I see thee by and by;
Till then, in blood, by noble Percy lye. Shaksp.

The roar
Embowell'd with outrageous noise the air,
And all her entrails tore. Milton.

Fossils and minerals that th' embowell'd earth
Displays. Philips.

To EMBRA'CE, ĕm-brāse'. v. a. [embrasser, Fr.]

Low at his feet a spacious plain is plac'd,
Between the mountain and the stream embrac'd. Denham.

5. To admit; to receive.

Fenton, Heav'n give thee joy!
What cannot be eschew'd, must be embrac'd. Shaksp.

If a man can be assured of any thing, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth? Locke.

6. To find; to take.

Fleance, his son,
Whose absence is no less material to me
Than is his father's must embrace the fate
Of that dark hour. Shaksp.

7. To squeeze in a hostile manner.

To EMBRA'CE, ĕm-brāse'. v. n. To join in an embrace.

Let me embrace with old Vincentio;
And wander we to see thy honest son
Who will of thy arrival be full joyous. Shaksp.

EMBRA'CE, ĕm-brāse'. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Clasp; fond pressure in the arms; hug.

Thames, the most lov'd of all the ocean's sons
By his old sire, to his embraces runs. Denham.

Such an accumulation of favours is like a kind of embroidering, or lifting of one favour upon another. Wotton.

Embroider'd so with flowers it had stood,
That it became a garden of a wood. Waller.

Let no virgin be allowed to receive her lover, but in a suit of her own embroidering. Spectator.

Embroider'd purple clothes the golden beds;
This slave the floor, and that the table spreads.
Pope.

EMBRO'IDERER, ĕm-brŏi'dŭr-ŭr. n. s. [embroider.] One that adorns clothes with needlework.

Blue silk and purple, the work of the embroiderer. Eccles.

EMBRO'IDERY, ĕm-brŏi'dŭr-ē. n. s. [from embroider.]

1. Figures raised upon a ground; variegated needlework.

Write,
In em'rald tuffs, flow'rs purfled, blue and white,
Like saphire, pearl, in rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee.
Shakspeare.

Laces and embroideries are more costly than either warm or comely. Bacon.

Next these a youthful train their vows express'd,
With feathers crown'd, with gay embroidery dress'd.
Pope.

2. Variegation; diversity of colours.

If the natural embroidery of the meadows were helpt and improved by art, a man might make a pretty landskip of his own possessions. Spectator.

To EMBRO'IL, ĕm-brŏil. v. a. [brouiller, French.]

1. To disturb; to confuse; to distract; to throw into commotion; to involve in troubles by dissension and discord.

I had no passion, design, or preparation to embroil my kingdom in a civil war. King Charles.

Rumour next, and chance,
And tumult and confusion, all embroil'd,
And discord with a thousand various mouths. Milt.

When she found her venom spread so far,
The royal house embroil'd in civil war,
Rais'd on her dusky wings she cleaves the skies.
Dryden.

2. To perplex; to entangle.

The christian antiquities at Rome, though of a fresher date, are so embroil'd with fable and legends, that one receives but little satisfaction.
Addison on Italy.

3. In the following passage the word seems improperly used for broil or burn.

That knowledge, for which we boldly attempt to rifle God's cabinet, should, like the coal from the altar, serve only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Decay of Piety.

To EMBRO'THEL, ĕm-brŏth'ĕl. v. a. [brothel, brodel.] To enclose in a brothel.

Men, which chuse
Law practice for mere gain, boldly repute,
Worse than embrothel'd strumpets prostitute.
Donne.

E'MBRYO, ĕm'brē-ō. } n. s. ἔμβρυων.
E'MBRYON, ĕm'brē-ŏn. }

1. The offspring yet unfinished in the womb.

The bringing forth of living creatures may be accelerated, if the embryo ripeneth and perfecteth sooner. Bacon.

An exclusion before conformation, before the birth can bear the name of the parent, or be so much as properly called an embryon. Brown.

The earth was form'd, but in the womb as yet
Of waters, embryon immature involv'd
Appear'd not. Milton.

In that dark womb are the signs and rudiments of an embryo world. Burnet.

When the crude embryo careful nature breeds,
See how she works, and how her work proceeds.
Blackmore.

While the promis'd fruit
Lies yet a little embryo, unperceiv'd
Within its crimson folds. Thomson.

2. The state of any thing yet not fit for production, or yet unfinished.

The company little suspected what a noble work I had then in embryo. Swift.

EME, ēme. n. s. [eame, Saxon.] Uncle. Obsolete.

Whilst they were young, Cassibelan their eme,
Was by the people chosen in their stead;
Who on him took the royal diadem,
And goodly well it long time governed. Spenser.

EMEN'DABLE, ē-mĕn'dā-bl. adj. [emendo, Latin.] Capable of emendation; corrigible.

EMENDA'TION, ĕm-ĕn-dā'shŭn.[530] n. s. [emendo, Latin.]

1. Correction; alteration of any thing from worse to better.

The essence and the relation of every thing in being, is fitted, beyond any emendation, for its action and use; and shews it to proceed from a mind of the highest understanding. Grew.

2. An alteration made in the text by verbal criticism.

EMENDA'TOR, ĕm-ĕn-dā'tŏr.[521] n. s. [emendo, Lat.] A corrector; an improver; an alterer for the better.

E'MERALD, ĕm'ĕ-rāld. n. s. [emeraude, Fr. smaragdus, Lat.] A green precious stone.

The emerald is evidently the same with the ancient smaragdus; and, in its most perfect state, is perhaps the most beautiful of all the gems. The rough emerald is usually of a very bright and naturally polished surface, and is ever of a pure and beautiful green, without the admixture of any other colour. The oriental emerald is of the hardness of the saphire and ruby, and is second only to the diamond in lustre and brightness. Hill.

Do you not see the grass how in colour they excel the emerald? Sidney.

The emerald is a bright grass green; it is found in fissures of rocks, along with copper ores.
Woodward.

Nor deeper verdure dies the robe of spring,
When first she gives it to the southern gale,
Than the green emerald shows. Thomson.

To EME'RGE, ē-mĕrje'. v. n. [emergo, Latin.]

1. To rise out of any thing in which it is covered.

They emerged, to the upper part of the spirit of wine, as much of them as lay immersed in the spirit.
Boyle.

The mountains emerged, and became dry land again, when the waters retired. Burnet.

Thetis, not unmindful of her son,
Emerging from the deep, to beg her boon,

2. To issue; to proceed.

If the prism was turned about its axis that way which made the rays emerge more obliquely out of the second refracting surface of the prism, the image soon became an inch or two longer, or more.
Newton.

3. To rise; to mount from a state of depression or obscurity; to rise into view.

Darkness, we see, emerges into light;
And shining suns descend to sable night. Dryden.

When, from dewy shade emerging bright
Aurora streaks the sky with orient light,
Let each deplore his dead. Pope.

Then from ancient gloom emerg'd
A rising world. Thomson.

EME'RGENCE, ē-mĕr'jĕnse. } n. s. [from
EME'RGENCY, ē-mĕr-jĕn-sē. } emerge.]

1. The act of rising out of any fluid by which it is covered.

We have read of a tyrant, who tried to prevent the emergence of murdered bodies. Brown.

2. The act of rising or starting into view.

The emergency of colours, upon coalition of the particles of such bodies, as were neither of them of the colour of that mixture whereof they are ingredients, is very well worth our attentive observation.
Boyle on Colours.

The white colour of all refracted light, at its very first emergence, where it appears as white as before its incidence, is compounded of various colours. Newton.

3. Any sudden occasion; unexpected casualty.

Most of our rarities have been found out by casual emergency, and have been the works of time and chance, rather than of philosophy. Glanville.

4. Pressing necessity; exigence. Not proper.

In any case of emergency, he would employ the whole wealth of his empire, which he had thus amassed together in his subterraneous exchequer. Addison.

EME'RGENT, ê-mêr'jênt. adj. [from emerge.]

Love made my emergent fortune once more look
Above the main, which now shall hit the stars.
Ben Jonson.

Immediately the mountains huge appear
Emergent, and their broad bare backs upheave
Into the clouds. Milton.

2. Rising into view, or notice, or honour.

The man that is once hated, both his good and his evil deeds oppress him; he is not easily emergent. Ben Jonson.

3. Proceeding or issuing from any thing.

The stoics held a fatality, and a fixed unalterable course of events; but then they held also, that they fell out by a necessity emergent from and inherent in the things themselves, which God himself could not alter. South.

4. Sudden; unexpectedly casual.

All the lords declared, that upon any emergent occasion, they would mount their servants upon their horses. Clarendon.

E'MERODS, êm'êr-ôds. } n. s. [corrupted

The time was in the heliacal emersion, when it becomes at greatest distance from the sun. Brown.

E'MERY, êm'êr-ê. n. s. [smyris, Latin; esmeril, French.]

Emery is an iron ore, considerably rich. It is found in the island of Guernsey, in Tuscany, and many parts of Germany. It has a near relation to the magnet. The lapidaries cut the ordinary gems on their wheels by sprinkling the wetted powder over them; but it will not cut diamonds. It is useful in cleaning and polishing steel. Hill.

EMETICAL, ê-mêt'ê-kâl. } adj. [ἐμέω.]
EME'TICK, ê-mêt'ik. } Having the quality of provoking vomits.

Various are the temperaments and operations of herbs; some purgative, some emetick, and some sudorifick. Hale.

EME'TICALLY, ê-mêt'ê-kâl-ê. adv. [from emetical.] In such a manner as to provoke to vomit.

It has been complained of, that preparations of silver have produced violent vomits; whereas we have not observed duly refined silver to work emetically, even in women and girls. Boyle.

EMICA'TION, êm-ê-kâ'shûn.[530] n. s. [micatio, Latin.] Sparkling; flying off in small particles, as sprightly liquors.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emication, as also a crass and fumid exhalation. Brown.

EMI'CTION, ê-mîk'shûn. n. s. [from emictum, Lat.] Urine; what is voided by the urinary passages.

Mountains abound with different vegetables, every vertex or eminency affording new kinds. Ray.

3. A part arising above the rest.

They must be smooth, almost imperceptible to the touch, and without either eminence or cavities. Dryden

4. A place where one is exposed to general notice.

A satyr or libel on one of the common stamp, never meets with that reception as what is aimed at a person whose merit places him upon an eminence, and gives him a more conspicuous figure. Addison.

5. Exaltation; conspicuousness; state of being exposed to view; reputation; celebrity; fame; preferment; greatness.

You've too a woman's heart, which ever yet
Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty. Shaksp.

Alterations are attributed to the powerfullest under princes, where the eminency of one obscureth the rest. Wotton.

He deserv'd no such return
From me whom he created what I was,
In that bright eminence; and with his good
Upbraided none. Milton.

Where men cannot arrive to any eminency of estate, yet religion makes a compensation, by teaching content. Tillotson.

These two were men of eminency, of learning as well as piety. Stillingfleet.

6. Supreme degree.

Whatever pure thou in the body enjoy'st,
And pure thou wert created, we enjoy
In eminence. Milton.

Makes visitation. Shakspeare.

E'MPERY, êm'pêr-ê.[503] n. s. [empire, Fr. imperium, Lat.] Empire; sovereignty; dominion. Out of use.

A lady
So fair, and fasten'd to an emperu,
Would make the great'st king double. Shaksp.

Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
But as successively from blood to blood,
Your right of birth, your empery, your own. Shaksp.

E'MPHASIS, êm'fâ-sis. n. s. [ἐμφασις.] A remarkable stress laid upon a word or sentence; particular force impressed by style or pronunciation.

Oh, that brave Cæsar!
—Be choak'd with such another emphasis. Shaksp.

Emphasis not so much regards the time as a certain grandeur, whereby some letter, syllable, word, or sentence is rendered more remarkable than the rest, by a more vigorous pronunciation, and a longer stay upon it. Holder.

These questions have force and emphasis, if they be understood of the antediluvian earth. Burnet.

EMPHA'TICAL, êm-fât'ik-âl. } adj. [ἐμφα-
EMPHA'TICK, êm-fât'ik. } κω.]

The empire of the sea. Shakspeare.

3. Command over any thing.

EMPI'RICK, êm'pê-rîk or êm-pîr'îk. n. s. [ἐμπειρικὸς. This word seems to have been pronounced empírick by Milton, and émpirick by Dryden. Milton's pronunciation is to be preferred.] A trier; an experimenter; such persons as have no true education in, or knowledge of, physical practice, but venture upon hearsay and observation only. Quincy.

The name of Hippocrates was more effectual to persuade such men as Galen, than to move a silly empirick. Hooker.

That every plant might receive a name according unto the diseases it cureth, was the wish of Paracelsus; a way more likely to multiply empirics than herbalists. Brown.

Such an aversion and contempt for all manner of innovators, as physicians are apt to have for empiricks, or lawyers for pettifoggers. Swift.

Th' illit'rate writer, emp'rick-like, applies
To each disease unsafe chance remedies;
The learn'd in school, when science first began,
Studies with care th' anatomy of man. Dryden.

EMPI'RICAL, êm-pîr'ê-kâl. } adj. [from
EMPI'RICK, êm-pîr'îk. } the noun.]

1. Versed in experiments.

By fire
Of sooty coal, the empirick alchymist
Can turn, or holds it possible to turn,
Metals of drossiest ore to perfect gold. Milton.

2. Known only by experience; practised only by rote, without rational grounds.

The most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empirick to this preservative. Shakspeare.

In extremes, bold counsels are the best;
Like empirick remedies, they last are try'd,
And by th' event condemn'd or justify'd. Dryden.

EMPI'RICALLY, êm-pîr'ê-kâl-lê. adv. [from empirical.]

1. Experimentally, according to experience.

We shall empirically and sensibly deduct the causes of blackness from originals by which we generally observe things denigrated. Brown.

2. Without rational ground; charlatanically; in the manner of quacks.

EMPI'RICISM, êm-pîr'ê-sîzm. n. s. [from empirick.] Dependence on experience without knowledge or art; quackery.

EMPLA'STER, êm-plâs'tûr. n. s. [ἔμπλαστρον. This word is now always pronounced and generally written plaster.] An application to a sore of an oleaginous or viscous substance, spread upon cloth. See PLASTER.

It is likewise attended with delirium, fury, and an involuntary laughter, the convulsion emulating this motion. Arbuthnot.

EMULA'TION, ĕm-ū-lā'shŭn. n. s. [æmulatio, Lat.]

1. Rivalry; desire of superiority.

Mine emulation
Hath not that honour in't it had; for where
I thought to crush him in an equal force,
True sword to sword, I'll pitch at him some way,
Or wrath or craft may get him. Shakspeare.

There was neither envy nor emulation amongst them. 1 Maccabees.

Aristotle allows that some emulation may be good, and may be found in some good men; yet envy he utterly condemns, as wicked in itself, and only to be found in wicked minds. Sprat.

The apostle exhorts the Corinthians to an holy and general emulation of the charity of the Macedonians, in contributing freely to the relief of the poor saints at Jerusalem. South.

A noble emulation heats your breast,
And your own fame now robs you of your rest:
Good actions still must be maintain'd with good,
As bodies nourish'd with resembling food. Dryden.

2. Envy; desire of depressing another; contest; contention; discord.

What madness rules in brainsick men,
When for so slight and frivolous a cause,
Such factious emulations shall arise! Shakspeare.

Kinds of musick encourage men, and make them warlike, or make them soft and effeminate. Bacon.

I would neither encourage the rebels, nor discourage the protestants loyalty. King Charles.

3. To raise confidence; to make confident.

I doubt not but there are ways to be found, to assist our reason in this most useful part; and this the judicious Hooker encourages me to say. Locke.

ENCO'URAGEMENT, ĕn-kŭr'rĭdje-mĕnt. n. s. [from encourage.]

1. Incitement to any action or practice; incentive.

2. Increase of confidence.

Such strength of heart
Thy conduct and example gives; nor small
Encouragement, Godolphin, wise and just. Philips.

3. Favour; countenance; support.

For when he dies farewell all honour, bounty,
All generous encouragement of arts. Otway.

The reproach of immorality will lie heaviest against an established religion, because those who have no religion will profess themselves of that which has the encouragement of the law. Rogers.

ENCO'URAGER, ĕn-kŭr'rĭdje-ŭr.[314] n. s. [from encourage.] One that supplies incitements to any thing; a favourer.

Live then, thou great encourager of arts,
Live ever in our thankful hearts. Dryden.

As the pope is a master of polite learning, and a great encourager of arts; so at Rome those arts immediately thrive, under the encouragement of the prince. Addison.

To ENCRO'ACH, ĕn-krōtsh'.[295] v. a. [accrocher, from croc, a hook, French.]

1. To make invasions upon the right of another; to put a hook into another man's possessions to draw them away.

Those Irish captains of counties have encroached upon the queen's freeholders and tenants. Spenser on Ireland.

2. To advance gradually and by stealth upon that to which one has no right: with on before the subject.

This hour is mine; if for the next I care, I grow too wide,
And do encroach upon death's side. Herbert.

Tisiphone, let loose from under ground,
Before her drives diseases and affright;
And every moment rises to the sight,
Aspiring to the skies, encroaching on the light. Dryden.

To ENCRO'ACH, ĕn-krōtsh'.[295] v. n.

1. To creep on gradually without right.

The superstition that riseth voluntarily, and by degrees mingieth itself with the rites even of every divine service, done to the only true God, must be considered of as a creeping and encroaching evil. Hooker.

Th' encroaching ill you early should oppose:
Flatter'd, 'tis worse, and by indulgence grows. Dryden.

2. To pass bounds.

They fabled how the serpent, whom they call'd
Ophion, with Eurynome; the wide
Encroaching Eve perhaps, had first the rule
Of high Olympus. Milton.

Next, fenc'd with hedges and deep ditches round,
Exclude th' encroaching cattle from thy ground. Dryden.

ENCRO'ACHER, ĕn-krōtsh'ŭr. n. s. [from encroach.]

1. One who seizes the possession of another by gradual and silent means.

The bold encroachers on the deep,
Gain by degrees huge tracts of land,
'Till Neptune, with one gen'ral sweep,
Turns all again to barren strand. Swift.

2. One who makes slow and gradual advances beyond his rights.

Full dress creates dignity, augments consciousness, and keeps at distance an encroacher. Clarissa.

ENCRO'ACHMENT, ĕn-krōtsh'mĕnt. n. s. [from encroach.]

1. An unlawful gathering in upon another man. For example: if two men's grounds lie together, the one presses too far upon the other; or if a tenant owe two shillings rent-service to the lord, and the lord takes three: so the Spensers encroached to themselves royal power and authority. Cowell.

But this usurper his encroachment proud
Stays not on man: to God his tow'r intends
Siege and defiance. Milton.

If it be a man's known principle to depart from his right, ill men will make unjust encroachments upon him. Atterbury.

2. Advance into the territories or rights of another.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of: this left no room for controversy about the title, nor for encroachment on the right of others. Locke.

The ancient Romans made many encroachments on the sea, and laid the foundations of their palaces within the very borders of it. Addison.

The people since the death of Solon, had already made great encroachments. Swift.

To ENCU'MBER, ĕn-kŭm'bŭr. v. a. [encombrer, Fr.]

ENCYCLOPE'DIA, ĕn-sĭ-klō-pē'dē-ă. } n. s.
ENCYCLOPE'DY, ĕn-sĭ-klō-pē'dē. }
[ἐγκυκλοπαιδεια.] The circle of sciences; the round of learning.

In this encyclopædia and round of knowledge, like the great wheels of heaven, we must observe two circles, that, while we are daily carried about, and whirled on by the swing and rapt of the one, we may maintain a natural and proper course in the sober wheel of the other. Brown.

Every science borrows from all the rest, and we cannot attain any single one without the encyclopædy. Glanville.

This art may justly claim a place in the encyclopædia, especially such as serves for a model of education for an able politician. Arbuthnot.

ENCY'STED, ĕn-sĭs'tĕd. adj. [κύστις.] Enclosed in a vesicle or bag.

Encysted tumours borrow their names from a cyst or bag in which they are contained. Sharp.

END, ĕnd. n. s. [ende, Saxon.]

1. The extremity of the length of any thing materially extended. Of bodies that have equal dimensions we do not use end: the extremity of breadth is side.

Jonathan put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipt it in a honeycomb. 1 Sam.

2. Extremity or last part in general.

The extremity and bounds of all bodies we have no difficulty to arrive at; but, when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress into this endless expansion: of that it can neither find, nor conceive any end. Locke.

3. The last part of any assignable duration.

Behold the day groweth to an end. Judges.
At the end of two months she returned. Judges.
If the world's age and death be argu'd well
By the sun's fall, which now towards earth doth bend,
Then we might fear, that virtue, since she fell
So low as woman, should be near her end. Donne.

4. The conclusion or cessation of any action.

Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons. Genesis.

Yet vainly most their age in study spend:
No end of writing books, and to no end. Denham.

The causes and designs of an action are the beginning; the effects of these causes, and the difficulties met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end. Broome.

5. When end is not used materially, it is opposed to beginning.

Better is the end than the beginning thereof. Eccles.

6. The conclusion or last part of any thing: as, the end of a chapter; the end of a discourse.

7. Ultimate state; final doom.

Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace. Psalms.

8. The point beyond which no progression can be made.

They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits end! Psalms.

9. Final determination; conclusion of debate or deliberation.

My guilt be on my head and there's an end! Shaksp.

10. Death; fate; decease.

I determine to write the life and the end the nature and the fortunes of George Villiers. Wotton.

The soul receives intelligence,
By her near genius, of the body's end,
And so imparts a sadness to the sense. Daniel.

'Tis the great business of life to fit ourselves for our end, and no man can live well that hath not death in his eye. L'Estrange.

Remember Milo's end,
Wedg'd in that timber which he strove to rend. Roscommon.

My God, my father, and my friend,
Do not forsake me in my end. Roscommon.

Unblam'd through life, lamented in thy end. Pope.

11. Cessation; period.

What is the sign of the end of the world? Matthew.

Great houses shall have an end. Amos.

12. Limit; termination.

There is no end of the store. Nahum.

13. Abolition; total loss.

There would be an end of all civil government, if the assignment of civil power were by such institution. Locke.

14. Cause of death; destroyer.

Take heed you dally not before your king,
Lest he that is the supreme King of kings,
Confound your hidden falsehood, and award
Either of you to be the other's end. Shaksp.

15. Consequence; conlusive event; conclusion.

O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come!
But it sufficeth that the day will end. Shaksp.
The end of these things is death. Romans.

16. Fragment; broken piece.

Thus I clothe my naked villany
With old odd ends, stol'n forth of holy writ,
And seem a saint. Shaksp.

17. Purpose; intention.

There was a purpose to reduce the monarchy to a republick, which was far from the end and purpose of that nation. Clarendon.

I have lov'd!
What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?
Can he who kill'd thy brother, live for thee? Dryden.

Heav'n as its instrument, my courage sends;
Heav'n ne'er sent those who fight for private ends. Dryden.

Others are apt to attribute them to some false end or intention. Addison.

And his old hate to you. Shaksp.

He prevailed with him, by enforcing the ill consequence of his refusal to take the office, which would be interpreted to his dislike of the court.
Clarendon.

To avoid all appearance of disaffection, I have taken care to enforce loyalty by an invincible argument. Swift.

6. To compel; to constrain.

For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil. Shak.

A just disdain conceived by that queen, that so wicked a rebel should prevail against her, did move and almost enforce her to send over that mighty army. Davies.

7. To press with a charge. Little used.

In this point charge him home, that he effects
Tyrannick pow'r: if he evade us there,
Enforce him with his envy to the people,
And that the spoils got on the Antiates
Was ne'er distributed. Shaksp.

To ENFO'RCE, ên-fôrse'. v. n. To prove; to evince; to show beyond contradiction.

Which laws in such case we must obey, unless there be reason shewed, which may necessarily enforce that the law of reason, or of God, doth enjoin the contrary. Hooker.

ENFO'RCE, ên-fôrse'. n. s. [from force.] Power; strength. Not used.

He now defies thee thrice to single fight,
As a petty enterprize of small enforce. Milton.

ENFO'RCEDLY, ên-fôr'sêd-lé.[384] adv. [from enforce.] By violence; not voluntarily; not spontaneously; not by choice.

If thou did'st put this sow'r cold habit on,
To castigate thy pride, 'twere well, but thou
Dost it enforcedly: thou 'dst courtier be,
Wert thou not beggar. Shaksp.

ENFO'RCEMENT, ên-fôrse'mênt. n. s. [from enforce.]

1. An act of violence; compulsion; force offered.

Confess 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her. Shaksp.

He that contendeth against these enforcements may easily master or resist them. Raleigh.

2. Sanction; that which gives force to a law.

The rewards and punishments of another life, which the Almighty has established as the enforcement of his law, are of weight enough to determine the choice. Locke.

3. Motive of conviction; urgent evidence.

The personal descent of God himself, and his assumption of our flesh to his divinity, was an enforcement beyond all the methods of wisdom that were ever made use of in the world. Hammond.

4. Pressing exigence.

More than I have said,
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on. Shaksp.

ENFO'RCER, ên-fôr'sûr.[98] n. s. [from enforce.] Compeller; one who effects by violence.

When a man tumbles a cylinder or roller down a hill, 'tis certain that the man is the violent enforcer of the first motion of it. Hammond.

ENFO'ULDRED, ên-fôl'drêd. adj. [from foudre, Fr.] Mixed with lightning. Obsolete.

Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,
With foul enfouldred smoak and flashing fire
The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skies.
Fairy Queen.

To ENFRA'NCHISE, ên-frân'tshiz.[169] v. a. [from franchise.]

1. To admit to the privileges of a freeman.

The English colonies, and some septs of the Irishry, enfranchised by special charters, were admitted to the benefit of the laws. Davies.

Romulus was the natural parent of all those people that were the first inhabitants of Rome, or of those that were after incorporated and enfranchised into that name, city, or government. Hale.

2. To set free from slavery.

Men, forbearing wine, come from drinking healths to a draught at a meal; and, lastly, to discontinue altogether: but if a man have the fortitude and resolution to enfranchise himself at once, that is the best. Bacon.

If they won a battle, prisoners became slaves, and continued so in their generations, unless enfranchised by their masters. Temple.

3. To free or release from custody.

His mistress
Did hold his eyes lockt in her crystal looks,
—Belike, that now she hath enfranchis'd them,
Upon some other pawn for fealty. Shaksp.

4. To denizen; to endenizen.

These words have been enfranchised amongst us. Watts.

ENFRA'NCHISEMENT, ên-frân'tshiz-mênt. n. s. [from enfranchise.]

1. Investiture of the privileges of a denizen.

The incorporating a man into any society, or body politick. For example, he that is by charter made denizen of England, is said to be enfranchised; and so is he that is made a citizen of London, or other city, or burgess of any town corporate, because he is made partaker of those liberties that appertain to the corporation. Cowell.

His coming hither hath no farther scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Enfranchisement immediate on his knees. Shaksp.

2. Release from prison or from slavery.

Never did captive with a freer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontroul'd enfranchisement. Shaksp.

ENFRO'ZEN, ên-frô'z'n.[103] particip. [from frozen.] Congealed with cold. Not used.

Yet to augment the anguish of my smart,
Thou hast enfrozen her disdainful breast,
That no one drop of pity there doth rest. Spenser.

To ENGA'GE, ên-gâje'. v. a. [engager, Fr.]

1. To make liable for a debt to a creditor.

Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy
To feed my means. Shaksp.

2. To impawn; to stake.

They most perfidiously condemn
Those that engag'd their lives for them. Hudibras.

3. To enlist; to bring into a party.

All wicked men are of a party against religion: some lust or interest engageth them against it.
Tillotson.

4. To embark in an affair.

So far had we engaged ourselves, unfortunate souls, that we listed not to complain, since our complaints could not but carry the greatest accusation to ourselves. Sidney.

Before I engage myself in giving any answer to this objection of incomsumptible lights, I would see the effect certainly averred. Digby.

5. To unite; to attach; to make adherent.

Good nature engages every body to him. Addison.

6. To induce; to win by pleasing means; to gain.

To every duty he could minds engage,
Provoke their courage, and command their rage.
Waller.

His beauty these, and those his blooming age,
The rest his house and his own fame engage.
Dryden.

So shall I court thy dearest truth
When beauty ceases to engage:
So thinking on thy charming youth,
I'll love it o'er again in age. Prior.

7. To bind by any appointment or contract.

We have been firm to our allies, without declining any expense to which we had engaged ourselves, and we have even exceeded our engagement.
Atterbury.

8. To seize by the attention: as, he was deeply engaged in conversation.

9. To employ; to hold in business.

For I shall sing of battles, blood, and rage,
Which princes and their people did engage. Dryd.

10. To encounter; to fight.

This bastard love is engendered bewixt lust and idleness. Sidney.

2. To produce; to form.

Oh nature! thou, who of the self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is pufft,
Engender'st the black toad and adder blue. Shak.
Again, if souls do other souls beget,
'Tis by themselves, or by the body's pow'r:
If by themselves, what doth their working let,
But they might souls engender ev'ry hour? Davies.

3. To excite; to cause; to produce.

Say, can you fast? Your stomachs are too young,
And abstinence engenders maladies. Shaksp.
The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends. Shaksp.
That engenders thunder in his breast,
And makes him roar these accusations forth. Shak.
It unloads the mind, engenders thoughts, and animates virtue. Addison.

4. To bring forth.

Vice engenders shame, and folly broods o'er grief. Prior.

To ENGE'NDER, ên-jên'dûr.[98] v. n. To be caused; to be produced.

Thick clouds are spread, and storms engender there. Dryden.

E'NGINE, ên'jin. n. s. [engin, French; ingegno, Italian.]

1. Any mechanical complication, in which various movements and parts concur to one effect.

2. A military machine.

This is our engine, towers that overthrows;
Our spear that hurts, our sword that wounds our foes. Fairfax.

3. Any instrument.

The sword, the arrow, the gun, with many terrible engines of death, will be well employed. Raleigh.

He takes the scissors and extends
The little engine on his fingers ends. Pope.

4. Any instrument to throw water upon burning houses.

Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;
And some more bold, mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.

5. Any means used to bring to pass, or to effect. Usually in an ill sense.

Prayer must be divine and heavenly, which the devil, with all his engines so violently opposeth. Duppa.

6. An agent for another. In contempt.

They had th' especial engines been, to rear
His fortunes up into the state they were. Daniel.

ENGINE'ER, ên-jê-nêêr'. n. s. [engenieur, Fr.] One who manages engines; one who directs the artillery of an army.

For 'tis the sport to have the engineer,
Hoist with his own petard. Shaksp.
Him thus enrag'd,
Descrying from afar, some engineer,
Dext'rous to guide th' unerring charge, design'd
By one nice shot, to terminate the war. Philips.
An author who points his satire at a great man, is like the engineer who signalized himself by this ungenerous practice. Addison.

E'NGINERY, ên'jin-rê. n. s. [from engine.]

1. The act of managing artillery.

They may descend in mathematicks to fortification, architecture, enginery, or navigation. Milton.

To ENGI'RD, ên-gîrd'.[382] v. a. [from gird.] To encircle; to surround; to environ; to encompass.

My heart is drown'd with grief,
My body round engirt with misery;
For what's more miserable than discontent? Shak.
That gold must round engirt these brows of mine. Shaksp.

E'NGLISH, ing'glish.[101] adj. [englep, Sax.] Belonging to England; thence English is the language of England.

He hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian; and you may come into the court, and swear that I have a poor pennyworth in the English. Shaksp.
Of English talc, the coarser sort is called plaister, or parget; the finer, spoad. Woodward.

To E'NGLISH, ing'glish. v. a. [from the noun.] To translate into English.

The hollow instrument terebra, we may english piercer. Bacon.
We find not a word in the text can properly be rendered anise, which is what the Latins call anethum, and properly englished dill. Brown.

To ENGLU'T, ên-glût'. v. a. [engloutir, French.]

1. To swallow up. It is now little used in any sense.

Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business,
Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general
Take hold on me: for my particular grief
Engluts, and swallows other sorrows. Shaksp.
Certainly thou art so near the gulf,
Thou needs must be englutted. Shaksp.
How many prodigal bits have slaves and peasants
This night englutted. Shaksp.

2. To fill.

Whose grieved minds, which choler did englut,
Against themselves turning their wrathful spight. Spenser.

3. To glut; to pamper.

Being once englutted with vanity he will straightway loath all learning. Ascham.

To ENGO'RE, ên-gôre'. v. a. [from gore.] To pierce; to prick. Not used.

As savage bull, whom two fierce mastiffs bait,
When rancour doth with rage him once engore,
Forgets with wary ward them to await,
But with his dreadful horns them drives afore. Spenser.

To ENGO'RGE, ên-gôrje'. v. a. [from gorge, Fr. a throat.] To swallow; to devour; to gorge.

Then fraught with rancour and engorged ire,
He cast at once him to avenge for all. Spenser.
That is the gulf of greedines, they say,
That deep engorgeth all this world his prey. Spenser.

To ENGO'RGE, ên-gôrje'. v. n. To devour; to feed with eagerness and voracity; to riot.

Greedily she engorg'd without restraint,
And knew not eating death! Milton.

To ENGRA'IL, ên-grâle'. v. a. [from grele, Fr. hail.] To variegate; to spot as with hail. A word now used only in heraldry, for to indent in curve lines.

Æacides then shews
A long lance and a caldron, new engrail'd with twenty hues. Chapman.
Polwheel beareth a saltier engrail'd. Carew.

To ENGRA'IN, ên-grâne'. v. a. [from grain.] To die deep; to die in grain.

See thou how fresh my flowers being spread,
Dyed in lilie white and crimson red,
With leaves engrain'd in lusty green. Spenser.

To ENGRA'PPLE, ên-grâp'pl.[405] v. n. [from grapple.] To close with; to contend with hold on each other.

There shall young Hotspur, with a fury led,
Engrapple with thy son, as fierce as he. Daniel.

To ENGRA'SP, ên-grâsp'. v. a. [from grasp.] To seize; to hold fast in the hand; to gripe.

Now 'gan Pyrocles wax as wood as he,
And him affronted with impatient might;
And both together fierce engrasped he,
Whiles Guyon standing by, their uncouth strife does see. Spenser.

To ENGRA'VE, ên-grâve'. v. a. preter. engraved; part. pass. engraved or engraven. [engraver, Fr.]

1. To picture by incisions in any matter.

Her ivory forehead, full of bounty brave,
Like a broad table, did itself dispread,
For love his lofty triumphs to engrave,
And write the battles of his great godhead. Fairy Queen.
O'er all, the heav'n's refulgent image shines;
On either gate were six engraven signs. Addison.
Names fresh engrav'd appear'd of wits renown'd;
I look'd again, nor could their trace be found. Pope.

2. To mark wood or stone.

Engrave the two stones with the names. Exodus.

3. To impress deeply; to imprint.

It would scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles in men's minds, in words of uncertain signification. Locke.
Our Saviour makes this return, fit to be engraven in the hearts of all promoters of charity. Atterbury.
Sounds which address the ear, are lost and die
In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye
Lives long upon the mind: the faithful sight
Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.

4. [from grave.] To bury; to inhume; to inter.

The son had charge of them, now being dead,
In seemly sort their corses to engrave,
And deck with dainty flowers their bridal bed. Spenser.

ENGRA'VER, ên-grâ'vûr. n. s. [from engrave.] A cutter in stone or other matter.

Images are not made in the brain itself, as the pencil of the painter or engraver makes the images in the table, but are imprinted in a wonderful method in the soul. Hale.

To ENGRIE'VE, ĕn-grēēv'. v. a. [from grieve.] To pain; to vex; to afflict; to disconsolate.

The gnawing anguish, and sharp jealousy,
Which his sad speech infixed in my breast,
Rankled so sore, and fester'd inwardly,
That my engrieved mind could find no rest.
Fairy Queen.

Aches, and hurts, and corns, do engrieve either towards rain, or towards frost. Bacon.

To ENGRO'SS, ĕn-grōsc'. v. a. [grossir, Fr.]

1. To thicken; to make thick.

But more happy he than wise,
Of that sea's nature did him not avise;
The waves thereof so slow and sluggish were,
Engross'd with mud, which did them foul agriese,
That every weighty thing they did upbear.
Fairy Queen.

2. To increase in bulk.

Though pillars, by channeling, be seemingly engrossed to our sight, yet they are truly weakened in themselves. Wotton.

3. To fatten; to plump up.

Not sleeping, to engross his idle body;
But praying, to enrich his watchful soul. Shaksp.

4. To seize in the gross; to seize the whole of any thing.

If thou engrossest all the griefs as thine,
Thou robb'st me of a moiety. Shakspeare.

Those two great things that so engross the desires and designs of both the nobler and ignobler sort of mankind, are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South.

A dog, a parrot, or an ape,
Or some worse brute in human shape,
Engross the fancies of the fair. Swift.

5. To purchase the whole of any commodity for the sake of selling at a high price.

6. To copy in a large hand.

Here is th' indictment of the good lord Hastings,
Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd. Shaksp.

A clerk, foredoom'd his father's soul to cross,
Who pens a stanza when he should engross. Pope.

ENGRO'SSER, ĕn-grōs'sŭr.[98] n. s. [from engross.] He that purchases large quantities of any commodity, in order to sell it at a high price.

A new sort of engrossers, or forestallers, having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen in the woollen manufactures, out of their warehouses, set the price upon the poor landholder. Locke.

ENGRO'SSMENT, ĕn-grōs'mĕnt. n. s. [from engross.] Appropriation of things in the gross; exhorbitant acquisition.

Our thighs are pack't with wax, our mouths with honey:
We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees,
Are murder'd for our pains! This bitter taste
Yield his engrossments to a dying father. Shaksp.

Those held their immoderate engrossments of power and favour by no other tenure than presumption. Swift.

To ENGUA'RD, ĕn-gârd'.[92] [332] v. a. [from guard.] To protect; to defend; to surround as guards. Not used.

A hundred knights! yes, that on ev'ry dream,
He may enguard his dotage with their pow'rs,
And hold our lives at mercy. Shakspeare.

To ENHA'NCE, ĕn-hânse'.[79] v. a. [hausser, enhausser, Fr.]

1. To lift up; to raise on high. A sense now obsolete.

Both of them high at once their hands enhanc'd,
And both at once their huge blows down did sway.
Spenser.

2. To raise; to advance; to heighten in price.

The desire of money is every where the same, its vent varies very little, but as its greater scarcity enhances its price, and increases the scramble. Locke.

3. To raise in esteem.

What is it but the experience of want that enhances the value of plenty? L'Estrange.

The remembrance of the difficulties we now undergo, will contribute to enhance our pleasure. Atterbury.

4. To aggravate; to increase from bad to worse.

To believe or pretend that whatever our hearts incite is the will of God within us, is the principle of villainy that hath acted in the children of disobedience, enhanced and improved with circumstances of greater imprudence than the most abominable heathens were guilty of. Hammond.

The relation which those children bore to the priesthood, contributed to enhance their guilt, and increase their punishment. Atterbury.

ENHA'NCEMENT, ĕn-hânse'mĕnt. n. s. [from enhance.]

1. Increase; augmentation of value.

Their yearly rents are not improved, the landlords making no less gain by fines than by enhancement of rents. Bacon.

2. Aggravation; increase of ill.

Jocular slanders have, from the slightness of the temptation, an enhancement of guilt. Government of the Tongue.

ENI'GMA, ē-nĭg'mâ. n. s. [ænigma, Lat. αἴνιγμα.] A riddle; an obscure question; a position expressed in remote and ambiguous terms.

The dark enigma will allow
A meaning; which, if well I understand,
From sacrilege will free the god's command. Dryd.

A custom was amongst the ancients of proposing an enigma at festivals, and adjudging a reward to him that solved it. Pope.

ENIGMA'TICAL, ĕn-ĭg-mât'ē-kâl.[530] adj. [from enigma.]

1. Obscure; ambiguously or darkly expressed.

Your answer, sir, is enigmatical. Shaksp.

Enigmatical deliveries comprehend useful varieties; but being mistaken by liberal expositors at first, they have been misunderstood by most since. Brown.

Whilst they affect enigmatical obscurity, they puzzle the readers of their divulged processes. Boyle.

Athenæus gives instances of the enigmatical propositions in use at Athens, and of the forfeitures and rewards upon the solution or non-solution. Broome.

2. Cloudy; obscurely conceived or apprehended.

Faith here is the assent to those things which come to us by hearing, and are so believed by adherence, or dark enigmatical knowledge, but hereafter are seen or known demonstratively. Hammond.

ENIGMA'TICALLY, ĕn-ĭg-mât'ē-kâl-ē. adv. [from enigma.] In a sense different from that which the words in their familiar acceptation imply.

Homer speaks enigmatically, and intends that these monsters are merely the creation of poetry. Broome.

ENI'GMATIST, ē-nĭg'mâ-tĭst. n. s. [from enigma.] One who deals in obscure and ambiguous matters; a maker of riddles.

That I may deal more ingenuously with my reader than the abovementioned enigmatist has done, I shall present him with a key to my riddle. Addis.

To ENJO'IN, ĕn-jŏĭn'.[299] v. a. [enjoindre, Fr.] To direct; to order; to prescribe. It is more authoritative than direct, and less imperious than command.

To satisfy the good old man,
I would bend under any heavy weight,
That he'll enjoin me to. Shakspeare.

Monks and philosophers, and such as do continually enjoin themselves. Bacon.

It endeavours to secure every man's interest, by enjoining that truth and fidelity be inviolably preserved. Tillotson.

ENJO'INER, ĕn-jŏĭn'ŭr. n. s. [from enjoin.] One who gives injunctions. Dict.

ENJO'INMENT, ĕn-jŏĭn'mĕnt. n. s. [from enjoin.] Direction; command.

Critical trial should be made by publick enjoinment, whereby determination might be settled beyond debate. Brown.

To ENJO'Y, ĕn-jŏē.[329] v. a. [jouir, enjouir, Fr.]

1. To feel or perceive with pleasure; to have a pleasing sense of; to be delighted with.

I could enjoy the pangs of death,
And smile in agony. Addison.

2. To obtain possession or fruition of.

Edward the saint, in whom it pleased God, righteous and just, to let England see what a blessing sin and iniquity would not suffer it to enjoy. Hooker.

He, who, to enjoy
Plato's elysium, leap'd into the sea,
Cleombrotus. Milton.

3. To please; to gladden; to exhilarate; to glad; to delight. This sense is usual with the reciprocal pronoun, and is derived from enjouir.

Creatures are made to enjoy themselves, as well as to serve us. More.

When a man shall, with a sober, sedate, diabolical rancour, look upon and enjoy himself in the sight of his neighbour's sin and shame, can he plead the instigation of any appetite in nature? South.

To ENJO'Y, ĕn-jŏē'. v. n. To live in happiness.

Then I shall be no more!
And Adam, wedded to another Eve,
Shall live with her enjoying, I extinct. Milton.

ENJO'YER, ĕn-jŏē'ŭr.[98] n. s. [from enjoy.] One that has fruition or possession. Dict.

ENJO'YMENT, ĕn-jŏē'mĕnt. n. s. [from enjoy.] Pleasure; happiness; fruition.

His hopes and expectations are bigger than hi enjoyments. Tillotson.

To ENKI'NDLE, ĕn-kĭn'dl.[405] v. a. [from kindle.]

1. To set on fire; to inflame; to put in a flame.

Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature
To quit this horrid act. Shakspeare.

2. To rouse passions; to set the soul into a flame.

Your hand
Gave sign for me to leave you; so I did,
Fearing to strengthen that impatience,
Which seem'd too much enkindled. Shakspeare.

3. To incite to any act or hope.

Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those who gave the thane of Cawder to me
Promis'd no less to them?
——That, trusted home,
Might yet enkindle you unto the crown. Shaksp.

To ENLA'RGE, ĕn-lârje'. v. a. [enlargir, Fr.]

1. To make greater in quantity or appearance.

The wall, in lustre and effect like glass,
Which o'er each object casting various dyes,
Enlarges some, and others multiplies. Pope.

2. To increase any thing in magnitude; to extend.

Where there is something both lasting and scarce, and so valuable to be hoarded up, there men will not be apt to enlarge their possessions of land. Locke.

3. To increase by representation; to magnify; to exaggerate.

4. To dilate; to expand.

O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged. 2 Corinthians.

5. To set free from limitation.

Though she appear honest to me, yet at other places, she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her. Shakspeare.

6. To extend to more purposes or uses.

It hath grown from no other root than only a desire to enlarge the necessary use of the word of God, which desire hath begotten an errour, enlarging it farther than soundness of truth will bear. Hooker.

7. To amplify; to aggrandize.

This is that science which would truly enlarge men's minds, were it studied. Locke.

Could the mind, as in number, come to so small a part of extension or duration as excluded divisibility, that would be the indivisible unit, or idea; by repetition of which it would make its more enlarged ideas of extension and duration. Locke.

8. To release from confinement.

Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rail'd against our person. Shakspeare.

Which with her entrails makes my hungry hounds a feast. Dryden.

2. The internal parts.

A precious ring that lightens all the hole,
And shews the ragged entrails of this pit. Shaksp.

He had brought to light but little of that treasure, that lay so long hid in the dark entrails of America. Locke.

The earth hath lost
Most of her ribs, as entrails; being now
Wounded no less for marble than for gold.
Ben Jonson.

To ENTRA'IL, ên'trîl. v. a. [intralciare, Ital.] To mingle; to interweave; to diversify.

Over him, art striving to compare
With nature, did an arbor green dispread,
Framed of wanton ivy, flow'ring fair,
Through which the fragrant eglantine did spread,
His pricking arms entrail'd with roses red
Fairy Queen.

A little wicker basket,
Made of fine twigs, entrailed curiously,
In which they gathered flowers. Spenser.

E'NTRANCE, ên'trânse. n. s. [entrans, Fr.]

1. The power of entering into a place.

Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out. Shakspeare.

Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and impartially keeps it, truth is sure to find both an entrance and a welcome too. South.

2. The act of entering.

The reason that I gather, he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance.
Shakspeare.

Better far, I guess,
That we do make our entrance several ways. Shaks.

All the world 's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players;
They have their exits and their entrances. Shaksp.

3. The passage by which a place is entered; avenue.

He charged them to keep the passages of the hilly country; for by them there was an entrance into Judea. Judith.

Palladio did conclude, that the principal entrance was never to be regulated by any certain dimensions, but by the dignity of the master. Wotton.

Many are the ways that lead
To his grim cave, all dismal! yet to sense
More terrible at th' entrance than within. Milton.

Let this, and every other anxious thought,
At th' entrance of my threshold be forgot. Dryden.

4. Initiation; commencement.

This is that which, at first entrance, baulks and cools them: they want their liberty. Locke.

5. Intellectual ingress; knowledge.

He that travelleth the country before he hath some entrance into the language, goeth to school, and not to travel. Bacon.

6. The act of taking possession of an office or dignity.

From the first entrance of this king to his reign, never was king either more loving or better beloved. Hayward.

7. The beginning of any thing.

St. Augustine, in the entrance of one of his sermons, makes a kind of apology. Hakewill.

The earl of Holland we have had occasion to mention before in the first entrance upon this discourse. Clarendon.

To ENTRA'NCE, ên-trânse'.[91] v. n. [from trance; transe, Fr. from transeo, Lat. to pass over; to pass for a time from one region to another.]

1. To put into a trance; to withdraw the soul wholly to other regions, while the body appears to lie in dead sleep.

2. To put into an ecstacy; to make insensible of present objects.

With delight I was entranced, and carried so far from myself, as that I am sorry that you ended so soon. Spenser.

Adam, now enforc'd to close his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd.
Milton.

And I so ravish'd with her heav'nly note,
I stood entranc'd and had no room for thought;
But all o'erpow'r'd with ecstacy of bliss,
Was in a pleasing dream of paradise. Dryden.

To ENTRA'P, ên-trâp'. v. a. [from trap.]

1. To ensnare; to catch in a trap or snare.

Take heed, mine eyes, how ye do stare
Henceforth too rashly on that guileful net;
In which, if ever eyes entrapped are,
Out of her bands ye by no means shall get.
Spenser.

The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now entrapt the noble-minded Talbot. Shaks.

2. To involve unexpectedly in difficulties or distresses; to entangle.

Misfortune waits advantage to entrap
The man most wary, in her whelming lap.
Fairy Queen.

He sought to entrap me by intelligence. Shaksp.

3. To take advantage of.

An injurious person lies in wait to entrap thee in thy words. Ecclus.

To ENTRE'AT, ên-trête'.[227] v. a. [traeter, Fr.]

1. To petition; to solicit; to importune.

Isaac entreated the Lord for his wife. Genesis.

2. To prevail upon by solicitation.

I have a wife, whom I protest I love;
I would she were in heav'n so she could
Entreat some pow'er to change this currish Jew.
Shakspeare.

The Lord was entreated of him, and Rebecca his wife conceived. Genesis.

It were a fruitless attempt to appease a power, whom no prayers could entreat, no repentance reconcile. Rogers.

3. To treat or use well or ill.

Whereas thy servant worketh truly, entreat him not evil. Ecclus.

Must you, sir John, protect my lady here?
Entreat her not the worse in that I pray
You use her well. Shakspeare.

Well I entreated her, who well deserv'd:
I call'd her often; for she always serv'd:
Use made her person easy to my sight,
And ease insensibly produc'd delight. Prior.

4. To entertain; to amuse. Not used.

My lord, I must entreat the time alone.
—God shield I should disturb devotion. Shaksp.

5. To entertain; to receive. Not in use.

The garden of Proserpino this hight,
And in the midst thereof a silver seat,
With a thick arbour goodly overdight,
In which she often us'd, from open heat,
Herself to shroud, and pleasures to entreat.
Fairy Queen.

To ENTRE'AT, ên-trête'. v. n.

1. To offer a treaty or compact. Not used.

Alexander was the first that entreated peace with them. Maccabees.

2. To treat; to discourse. Not used.

The most admirable mystery of nature is the turning of iron, touched with the loadstone, toward the north-pole, of which I shall have farther occasion to entreat. Hakewill.

3. To make a petition.

They charged me, on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, or any way sustain him. Shakspeare.

The janizaries entreated for them, as valiant men. Knolles.

ENTRE'ATANCE, ên-trê'tânse. n. s. [from entreat.] Petition; entreaty; solicitation. Not used.

These two entreatance made they might be heard,
Nor was their just petition long deny'd. Fairfax.

ENTREA'TY, ên-trê'tê. n. s. [from entreat.] Petition; prayer; solicitation; supplication; request.

If my weak orator
Can from his mother win the duke of York,
Anon expect him here; but if she be
Obdurate to entreaties, God forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of sanctuary. Shakspeare.

ENTREME'TS, ên-trê-mêtz'. n. s. [Fr.] Small plates set between the main dishes.

Chards of beet are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midst, have a large white main shoot, which is the true chard used in pottages and entremets. Mortimer.

E'NTRY, ên'trê. n. s. [from enter; entrée, Fr.]

1. The passage by which any one enters a house.

Some there are that know the resorts and falls of business, that cannot sink into the main of it; like a house that hath convenient stairs and entries, but never a fair room. Bacon.

A strait long entry to the temple led,
Blind with high walls, and horror over head.
Dryden.

Is all this hurry made
On this account, because thou art afraid
A dirty hall or entry should offend
The curious eyes of thy invited friend. Dryden.

We proceeded through the entry, and were necessarily kept in order by the situation. Tatler.

2. The act of entrance; ingress.

Bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emollition; and the mixture of oil and water is better than either of them alone, because water entereth better into the pores, and oil after entry softeneth better. Bacon.

The lake of Constance is formed by the entry of the Rhine. Addison.

By the entry of the chyle and air into the blood, by the lacteals, the animal may again revive. Arbuthnot.

3. The act of taking possession of any estate.

4. The act of registering or setting down in writing.

A notary made an entry of this act. Bacon.

5. The act of entering publickly into any city.

The day being come, he made his entry: he was a man of middle stature and age, and comely. Bacon.

To ENU'BILATE, ê-nû'bê-lâte. v. a. [e and nubile, Lat.] To clear from clouds. Dict.

To ENU'CLEATE, ê-nû'klê-âte. v. a. [enucleo, Lat.] To solve; to clear; to disentangle. Dict.

To ENVE'LOP, ên-vêl'ûp. v. a. [envelopper, Fr.]

1. To inwrap; to cover; to invest with some integument.

2. To cover; to hide; to surround.

The best and wholesom'st spirits of the night envelop you, good provost. Shakspeare.

A cloud of smoke envelops either host,
And all at once the combatants are lost:
Darkling they join adverse, and shock unseen,
Coursers with coursers justing, men with men.
Dryden.

It is but to approach nearer, and that mist that enveloped them will remove. Locke.

Nocturnal shades
This world envelop, and th' inclement air
Persuades men to repel benumming frosts. Philips.

3. To line; to cover on the inside.

His iron coat, all overgrown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Darkened with filthy dust. Fairy Queen.

ENVELO'PE, ôn-vê-lôpe'. n. s. [Fr.] A wrapper; an outward case; an integument; a cover.

Send those to paper-sparing Pope;
And, when he sits to write,

No letter with an envelope
Could give him more delight. Swift.

To ENVE'NOM, ên-vên'ûm.[166] v. a. [from venom.]

1. To taint with poison; to poison, to impregnate with venom. It is never used of the person to whom poison is given, but of the draught, meat, or instrument by which it is conveyed.

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,
Unbated and envenom'd. Shakspeare.

Alcides, from Oechalia crown'd
With conquest, felt th' envenom'd robe, and tore,
Through pain, up by the roots Thessalian pines.
Milton.

Nor with envenom'd tongue to blast the fame
Of harmless men. Philips.

2. To make odious.

Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely
Envenoms him that bears it! Shakspeare.

3. To enrage; to exasperate.

With her full force she threw the pois'nous dart,
And fix'd it deep within Amata's heart;
That thus envenom'd she might kindle rage,
And sacrifice to strife her house and husband's age.
Dryden.

E'NVIABLE, ên'vè-â-bl.[405] adj. [from envy.] Deserving envy; such as may excite envy.

They, in an enviable mediocrity of fortune, do happily possess themselves. Carew.

E'NVIER, ên'vè-ûr.[98] n. s. [from envy.] One that envies another; a maligner; one that desires the downfal of another.

Men had need beware how they be too perfect in compliments; for that enviers will give them that attribute, to the disadvantage of their virtues.
Bacon's Essays.

They ween'd
To win the mount of God, and on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud
Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain.
Milton.

All preferments in church and state were given by him, all his kindred and friends promoted, and all his enemies and enviers discountenanced.
Clarendon.

E'NVIOUS, ên'vè-ûs.[314] adj. [from envy.]

1. Infected with envy; pained by the excellence or happiness of another.

A man of the most envious disposition that ever infected the air with his breath, whose eyes could not look right upon any happy man, nor ears bear the burden of any man's praise. Sidney.

Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Shaksp.

2. Sometimes with against.

Be not thou envious against evil men. Prov.

3. Sometimes with at.

Neither be thou envious at the wicked. Prov.

4. Commonly with of.

Sure you mistake the precept, or the tree;
Heav'n cannot envious of his blessings be. Dryden.

E'NVIOUSLY, ên'vè-ûs-lè. adv. [from envious.] With envy; with malignity; with ill-will, excited by another's good.

Damned spirits, being fallen from heaven, endeavour enviously to obstruct the ways that may lead us thither. Duppa.

How enviously the ladies look,
When they surprise me at my book!
And sure as they 're alive at night,
As soon as gone, will shew their spight. Swift.

To ENVI'RON, ên-vî'rûn.[166] v. a. [environner, French.]

1. To surround; to encompass; to encircle.

I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea. Shaksp.

The country near unto the city of Sultania is on every side environed with huge mountains. Knolles.

The manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environed the same site and temple. Bacon.

Within the environing rocks stood the city.
Sandys.

Thought following thought, and step by step led on,
He enter'd now the bordering desart wild,
And with dark shades and rocks environ'd round,
His holy meditation thus pursu'd. Milton.

God hath scattered several degrees of pleasure and pain in all the things that environ and affect us, and blended them together in almost all our thoughts. Locke.

2. To involve; to envelop.

May never glorious sun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you, 'till mischief and despair
Drive you to break your necks. Shaksp.

Since she must go, and I must mourn, come night,
Environ me with darkness whilst I write. Donne.

3. To surround in a hostile manner; to besiege; to hem in.

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears. Shaksp.

In thy danger,
If ever danger do environ thee,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer. Shaksp.

I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs,
By the known rules of ancient liberty,
When straight a barbarous noise environs me.
Milton.

4. To enclose; to invest.

The soldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horrour all environ. Cleaveland.

ENVI'RONS, ôn-vè-rônz', or ên-vî'rûns.[166] n. s. [environs, Fr.] The neighbourhood, or neighbouring places round about the country.

To ENU'MERATE, ê-nû'mè-râte. v. a. [enumero, Lat.] To reckon up singly; to count over distinctly; to number.

You must not only acknowledge to God that you are a sinner, but must particularly enumerate the kinds of sin whereof you know yourself guilty.
Wake.

Besides enumerating the gross defect of duty to the queen, I show how all things were managed wrong. Swift.

ENUMERA'TION, ê-nû-mè-râ'shûn. n. s. [enumeratio, Lat.] The act of numbering or counting over; number told out.

Whosoever reads St. Paul's enumeration of duties, must conclude, that well nigh the business of christianity is laid on charity. Sprat.

The chemists make spirit, salt, sulphur, water and earth their five elements, though they are not all agreed in this enumeration of elements. Watts.

To ENU'NCIATE, ê-nûn'shè-âte. v. a. [enuncio, Lat.] To declare; to proclaim; to relate; to express.

ENUNCIA'TION, ê-nûn-shè-â'shûn. n. s. [enunciatio, Latin.]

1. Declaration; publick attestation; open proclamation.

Preaching is to strangers and infants in Christ, to produce faith; but this sacramental enunciation is the declaration and confession of it by men in Christ, declaring it to be done and owned, and accepted, and prevailing. Taylor.

2. Intelligence; information.

It remembers and retains such things as were never at all in the sense; as the conceptions, enunciations, and actions of the intellect and will. Hale.

3. Expression.

ENU'NCIATIVE, ê-nûn'shè-â-tîv. adj. [from enunciate.] Declarative; expressive.

This presumption only proceeds in respect of the dispositive words, and not in regard of the enunciative terms thereof. Ayliffe

ENU'NCIATIVELY, ê-nûn'shè-â-tîv-lè. adv. [from enunciative.] Declaratively.

E'NVOY, ên'vòè. n. s. [envoye, French.]

1. A public minister sent from one power to another.

Now the Lycian lots conspire
With Phœbus; now Jove's envoy through the air
Brings dismal tidings. Denham.

Perseus sent envoys to Carthage, to kindle their hatred against the Romans. Arbuthnot.

2. A publick messenger; in dignity below an ambassador.

3. A messenger.

The watchful sentinels at ev'ry gate,
At ev'ry passage to the senses wait;
Still travel to and fro the nervous way,
And their impressions to the brain convey;
Where their report the vital envoys make,
And with new orders are commanded back.
Blackmore.

To E'NVY, ên'vè. v. a. [envier, French; invidere, Latin.]

1. To hate another for excellence; happiness, or success.

Envy thou not the oppressor, and chuse none of his ways. Proverbs.

A woman does not envy a man for fighting courage, nor a man a woman for her beauty. Collier.

2. To grieve at any qualities of excellence in another.

I have seen the fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour. Shaksp.

You cannot envy your neighbour's wisdom, if he gives you good counsel; nor his riches, if he supplies you in your wants; nor his greatness, if he employs it to your protection. Swift.

3. To grudge; to impart unwillingly; to withhold maliciously.

Johnson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, seemed to envy others that knowledge. Dryden.

To E'NVY, ên'vè. v. n. To feel envy, to feel pain at the sight of excellence or felicity: with at.

In seeking tales and informations
Against this man, whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at,
Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Shaksp.

He that loves God is not displeased at accidents which God chuses, nor envies at those gifts he bestows. Taylor.

Who would envy at the prosperity of the wicked, and the success of persecutors? Taylor.

E'NVY, ên-vè.[182] n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Pain felt and malignity conceived at the sight of excellence or happiness.

Envy is a repining at the prosperity or good of another, or anger and displeasure at any good of another which we want, or any advantage another hath above us. Ray.

Envy, to which th' ignoble mind's a slave,
Is emulation in the learn'd or brave. Pope.

2. It is used sometimes with of.

All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar. Shaksp.

3. Sometimes with to.

Many suffered death merely in envy to their virtuous and superior genius. Swift.

4. Rivalry; competition.

You may see the parliament of women, the little envies of them to one another. Dryden.

5. Malice; malignity.

Madam; this is a mere distraction,
You turn the good we offer into envy. Shaksp.

6. Public odium; ill repute; invidiousness.

Edward Plantagenet should be shewed unto the people; to discharge the king of the envy of that opinion and bruit, how he had been put to death privily. Bacon.

To ENWHE'EL, ên-whêêl'. v. a. [from wheel.] To encompass; to encircle. A word probably peculiar to Shakspeare.

Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heav'n
Before, behind thee, and on ev'ry hand
Enwheel thee round. Othello.

To ENWO'MB, ên-wôôm'. v. a. [from womb.]

1. To make pregnant.

Me then he left enwombed of this child,
This luckless child, whom thus ye see with blood. Spenser.

I'm your mother,
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enwombed mine. Shaksp.

2. To bury; to hide as in a womb.

Or as the Africk Niger's stream enwombs
Itself into the earth, and after comes,
Having first made a natural bridge to pass,
For many leagues, far greater than it was;
May 't not be said, that her grave shall restore
Her greater, purer, finer than before? Donne.

EO'LIPILE, ê-ô'lê-pile. n. s. [from Æolus and pila.] A hollow ball of metal with a long pipe: which ball, filled with water, and exposed to the fire, sends out, as the water heats, at intervals, blasts of cold wind through the pipe.

Considering the structure of that globe, the exterior crust, and the waters lying around under it, both exposed to the sun, we may fitly compare it to an eolipile, or an hollow sphere with water in it, which the heat of the fire rarifies, and turns into vapours and wind. Burnet.

EPA'CT, ê'pâkt. n. s. [ἐπακτη.] A number, whereby we note the excess of the common solar year above the lunar, and thereby may find out the age of the moon every year. For the solar year consisting of 365 days, the lunar but of 354, the lunations every year get eleven days before the solar year; and thereby, in 19 years, the moon completes 20 times 12 lunations, or gets up one whole solar year; and having finished that circuit, begins again with the sun, and so from 19 to 19 years. For the first year afterwards the moon will go before the sun but 11 days; the second year 22 days; the third 33 days; but 30 being an intire lunation, cast that away, and the remainder 3 shall be that year's epact, and so on, adding yearly 11 days. To find the epact, having the prime or golden number given, you have this rule:

Divide by three; for each one left add ten;
Thirty reject; the prime makes epact then. Harris.

As the cycle of the moon serves to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations; so this Dionysian period serves to shew these two cycles both together, and how they proceed or vary all along, 'till at last they accomplish their period, and both together take their beginning again, after every 532d year. Holder.

EPA'ULMENT, ê-pâwl'mênt. n. s. [French, from epaule, a shoulder.] In fortification, a side-work made either of earth thrown up, of bags of earth, gabions, or of fascines and earth. It sometimes denotes a semibastion and a square orillion, or mass of earth faced and lined with a wall, designed to cover the cannon of a cazemate. Harris.

EPE'NTHESIS, ê-pên'*th*ê-sis. n. s. [ἐπενθεσις.] In grammar, the addition of a vowel or consonant in the middle of a word. Harris.

E'PHA, ê'fâ. n. s. [Hebrew.] A measure among the Jews, containing fifteen solid inches.

The epha and the bath shall be of one measure; that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the epha the tenth part of an homer. Ezekiel.

EPHE'MERA, ê-fêm'ê-râ. n. s. [εφημερη.]

1. A fever that terminates in one day.
2. An insect that lives only one day.

EPHE'MERAL, ê-fêm'ê-râl.[88] } adj. [εφη-
EPHE'MERICK, ê-fêm'ê-rik.[510] } μέριος.]
Diurnal; beginning and ending in a day.

This was no more than a mere bubble or blast, and like an ephemeral fit of applause. Wotton.

EPHE'MERIS, ê-fêm'ê-ris. n. s. [ἐφημερις.]

1. A journal; an account of daily transactions.
2. An account of the daily motions and situations of the planets.

When casting up his eyes against the light,
Both month, and day, and hour, he measured right;
And told more truly than the ephemeris;
For art may err, but nature cannot miss. Dryden.

EPHE'MERIST, ê-fêm'ê-rist. n. s. [from ephemeris.] One who consults the planets; one who studies or practises astrology.

The night before, he was discoursing of and slighting the art of foolish astrologers, and genethiacal ephemerists, that pry into the horoscope of nativities. Howel.

EPHEMERON-WORM, ê-fêm'ê-rôn-wûrm. n. s. [from ἐφημερον and worm.] A sort of worm that lives but a day.

Swammerdam observes of the ephemeron-worms, that their food is clay; and that they make their cells of the same. Derham.

E'PHOD, êf'ôd. n. s. [אפוד.] A sort of ornament worn by the Hebrew priests.

The ephod worn by the high priest was richly composed of gold, blue, purple, crimson, and twisted cotton: and upon the part which came over his two shoulders were two large precious stones, upon which were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, upon each stone six names. Where the ephod crossed the high priest's breast, was a square ornament, called the breast-plate; in which twelve precious stones were set, with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel engraved on them, one on each stone. The ephods worn by the other priests were of plain linen. Calmet.

He made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen. Exodus.

Array'd in ephods; nor so few
As are those pearls of morning dew,
Which hang on herbs and flowers. Sandys.

E'PIC, êp'ik. adj. [epicus, Latin; ἐπος.] Narrative; comprising narrations, not acted, but rehearsed. It is usually supposed to be heroick, or to contain one great action achieved by a hero.

Holmes, whose name shall live in epic song,
While musick numbers, or while verse has feet. Dryden.

The epic poem is more for the manners, and the tragedy for the passions. Dryden.

From morality they formed that kind of poem and fable which we call epic. Broome.

EPICE'DIUM, êp-ê-sê'dê-ûm. n. s. [ἐπικηδιος.] An elegy; a poem upon a funeral.

You from above shall hear each day
One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay;
These, your own anthems, shall become
Your lasting epicedium. Sandys

E'PICURE, êp'ê-kûre. n. s. [epicureus, Latin.] A follower of Epicurus; a man given wholly to luxury.

Then fly false thanes,
And mingle with the English epicures. Shaksp.

The epicure buckles to study, when shame, or the desire to recommend himself to his mistress, shall make him uneasy in the want of any sort of knowledge. Locke.

EPICU'REAN, êp-ê-kû-rê'ân. adj. Luxurious; contributing to luxury.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming; epicurean cooks,
Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite. Shaksp.

What a damn'd epicurean rascal is this? Shaksp.

E'PICURISM, êp'ê-kû-rîzm. n. s. [from epicure.] Luxury; sensual enjoyment; gross pleasure.

Here you do keep a hundred knights and squires;
Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd, and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust
Make it a tavern or a brothel. Shaksp.

There is not half so much epicurism in any of their most studied luxuries, as a bleeding fame at their mercy. Government of the Tongue.

Some good men have ventured to call munificence, the greatest sensuality, a piece of epicurism. Calamy's Sermons.

To EPICURI'ZE, êp-ê-kû-rîze'. v. n. [from Epicurus.] To devour like an epicure. A word not used.

While I could see thee full of eager pain
My greedy eyes epicuriz'd on thine. Flatman.

EPICY'CLE, êp'ê-sî-kl. n. s. [ἐπὶ and κύκλος.] A little circle whose centre is in the circumference of a greater; or a small orb, which, being fixed in the deferent of a planet, is carried along with its motion: and yet, with its own peculiar motion, carries the body of the planet fastened to it round about its proper centre. Harris.

In regard of the epicycle, or lesser orb, wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is various and unequal. Brown.

Gird the sphere
With centric and eccentric, scribbled o'er;
Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton.

EPICY'CLOID, êp-ê-sî'klôîd. n. s. [ἐπικυκλοειδης.] A curve generated by the revolution of the periphery of a circle along the convex or concave part of another circle. Harris.

EPIDE'MICAL, êp-ê-dêm'ê-kâl. } adj. [ἐπὶ
EPIDE'MICK, êp-ê-dêm'îk.[509] } and δημος.]

1. That falls at once upon great numbers of people, as a plague.

It was conceived not to be an epidemic disease, but to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of seasons. Bacon.

As the proportion of epidemical diseases shews the aptness of the air to sudden and vehement impressions, the chronical diseases shew the ordinary temper of the place. Graunt.

2. Generally prevailing; affecting great numbers.

The more epidemical and prevailing this evil is,

the more honourable are those who shine as exceptions. South.

He ought to have been busied in losing his money, or in other amusements equally laudable and epidemick among persons of honour. Swift.

3. General; universal. Not used, nor proper.

They're citizens o' th' world, they're all in all; Scotland 's a nation epidemical. Cleaveland.

EPIDE'RMIS, ĕp-ĕ-dĕr'mĭs. n. s. [ἐπιδέρμις.] The scarf-skin of a man's body.

E'PIGRAM, ĕp'ĕ-grăm. n. s. [epigramma, Latin.] A short poem terminating in a point.

A college of witcrackers cannot flout me out of my humour: dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shaksp.

What can be more witty than the epigram of Moor upon the name of Nicolaus, an ignorant physician, that had been the death of thousands? Peacham.

I writ
An epigram that boasts more truth than wit. Gay.

EPIGRAMMA'TICAL, ĕp-ĕ-grăm-măt'ĕ-kăl. } EPIGRAMMA'TICK, ĕp-ĕ-grăm-măt'ĭk.[509] } adj. [epigrammaticus, Latin.]

1. Dealing in epigrams; writing epigrams.

Our good epigrammatical poet, old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous forespeaking to lie in names. Camden.

2. Suitable to epigrams; belonging to epigrams.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatic wit, and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately without ambition. Addison.

He has none of those little points and peuerilities that are so often to be met with in Ovid; none of the epigrammatick turns of Lucan; none of those swelling sentiments which are so frequent in Statius and Claudian; none of those mixt embellishments of Tasso. Addison.

EPIGRA'MMATIST, ĕp-ĕ-grăm'mă-tĭst. n. s. [from epigram.] One who writes or deals in epigrams.

A jest upon a poor wit, at first might have had an epigrammatist for its father, and been afterwards gravely understood by some painful collector. Pope.

Such a customer the epigrammatist Martial meets withal, one who, after he had walked through the fairest street twice or thrice, cheapening jewels, plate, rich hangings, came away with a wooden dish. Peacham.

EPI'GRAPHE, ĕp-ĕ'grăf. n. s. [ἐπιγραφη.] An inscription on a statue. Dict.

E'PILEPSY, ĕp'ĕ-lĕp-sē. n. s. [ἐπίληψις.] A convulsion, or convulsive motion of the whole body, or of some of its parts, with a loss of sense. A convulsive motion happens when the blood or nervous fluid, runs into any part with so great violence that the mind cannot restrain them. Quincy.

My lord is fell into an epilepsy:
This is the second fit. Shaksp.

Melancholy distempers are deduced from spirits drawn from that cacochymia; the phrenitis from cholerick spirits, and the epilepsy from fumes. Floyer.

EPILE'PTICK, ĕp-ĕ-lĕp'tĭk.[509] adj. [from epilepsy.] Convulsed; diseased with an epilepsy.

A plague upon your epileptick visage!
Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool? Shaksp.

Epilepticks ought to breath a pure air unaffected with any steams, even such as are very fragrant. Arbuthnot.

E'PILOGUE, ĕp'ĕ-lôg.[338] n. s. [epilogus, Latin.] The poem or speech at the end of a play.

If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. Shaksp.

Are you mad, you dog?
I am to rise and speak the epilogue. Dryden.

EPINY'CTIS, ĕp-ĕ-nĭk'tĭs. n. s. [ἐπινυκτίς.] A sore at the corner of the eye.

The epinyctis is of the bigness of a lupin, of a dusky red, and sometimes of a livid and pale colour, with great inflammation and pain. Wiseman.

EPI'PHANY, ĕ-pĭf'fă-nē. n. s. [ἐπιφανεία.] A church festival, celebrated on the twelfth day after Christmas in commemoration of our Saviour's being manifested to the world, by the appearance of a miraculous blazing star, which conducted the magi to the place where he was. Dict.

EPIPHONE'MA, ĕp-ĕ-fō-nē'mă. n. s. [ἐπιφωνημα.] An exclamation; a conclusive sentence not closely connected with the words foregoing.

I know a gentleman, who made it a rule in reading to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. If those preachers who abound in epiphonemas would but look about them, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance, and the other asleep, except perhaps an old female beggar or two in the isles; who, if they be sincere, may probably groan at the sound. Swift.

EPI'PHORA, ĕ-pĭf'fō-ră. n. s. [ἐπίφορα.] An inflammation of any part, but more especially a defluxion of the humours on the eyes. Harris.

EPIPHYLLOSPE'RMOUS, ĕ-pĕ-fĭl-lŏs-spĕr'mŭs. adj. [from επι, φύλλον, and σπέρμα.] It is applied to plants that bear their seed on the back part of their leaves. Harris.

EPI'PHYSIS, ĕ-pĭf'ĕ-sĭs.[520] n. s. [ἐπιφυσις.] Accretion; the part added by accretion; one bone growing to another by simple contiguity, without any proper articulation. Quincy.

The epiphysis of the os femoris is a distinct bone from it in a child, whereas in a man they do entirely unite. Wiseman.

EPI'PLOCE, ĕ-pĭp'lō-sē. n. s. [ἐπιπλοκη.] A figure of rhetorick, by which one aggravation, or striking circumstance, is added in due gradation to another: as, he not only spared his enemies, but continued them in employment; not only continued, but advanced them.

EPI'SCOPACY, ĕ-pĭs'kō-pă-sē. n. s. [episcopatus, Lat.] The government of bishops, the government of the church established by the apostles.

The bishops durst not contest with the assembly in jurisdiction; so that there was little more than the name of episcopacy preserved. Clarendon.

Prelacy itself cannot be proved by prescription, since episcopacy is not prescribed by any time whatsoever. Ayliffe.

EPI'SCOPAL, ĕ-pĭs'kō-păl. adj. [from episcopus, Lat.]

1. Belonging to a bishop.

The plot of discipline sought to erect a popular authority of elders, and to take away episcopal jurisdiction. Hooker.

2. Vested in a bishop.

The apostle commands Titus not only to be a pattern of good works himself, but to use his episcopal authority in exhorting every rank and order of men. Rogers.

EPI'SCOPATE, ĕ-pĭs'kō-păte.[91] n. s. [episcopatus, Lat.] A bishoprick; the office and dignity of a bishop.

E'PISODE, ĕp'ĕ-sōde. n. s. [ἐπισοδη.] An incidental narrative or digression in a poem, separable from the main subject, yet rising naturally from it.

The poem hath no other episodes than such as naturally arise from the subject. Addison.

EPISO'DICAL, ĕp-ĕ-sŏd'ĕ-kăl. } EPISO'DICK, ĕp-ĕ-sŏd'ĭk.[509] } adj. [from episode.] Contained in an episode; pertaining to an episode.

Episodical ornaments, such as descriptions and narrations, were delivered to us from the observations of Aristotle. Dryden.

I discover the difference between the episodick and principal action, as well as the nature of episodes. Notes on the Odyssey.

EPISPA'STICK, ĕp-ĕ-spăs'tĭk. n. s. [ἐπι and σπάω.]

1. Drawing.

2. Blistering. This is now the more frequent, though less proper sense.

The matter ought to be solicited to the lower parts, by fomentations, bathing, epispasticks, and blistering. Arbuthnot.

EPI'STLE, ĕ-pĭs'sl.[472] n. s. [ἐπιστολη.] A letter. This word is seldom used but in poetry, or on occasions of dignity and solemnity.

When loose epistles violate chaste eyes,
She half consents, who silently denies. Dryden.

EPI'STOLARY, ĕ-pĭs'tō-lăr-ē. adj. [from epistle.]

1. Relating to letters; suitable to letters.

2. Transacted by letters.

I shall carry on an epistolary correspondence between the two heads. Addison.

E'PITAPH, ĕp'ĕ-tăf. n. s. [ἐπιτάφιος.] An inscription upon a tomb.

Live still, and write mine epitaph. Shaksp.

Some thy lov'd dust in Parian stones enshrine,
Others immortal epitaphs design;
With wit and strength, that only yields to thine.
Smith.

EPITHALA'MIUM, ĕp-ĕ-thă-lā'mē-ŭm. n. s. [ἐπιθάλαμος.] A nuptial song; a compliment upon marriage.

I presume to invite you to the sacred nuptials; the epithalamium sung by a crowned muse. Sandys.

The forty-fifth psalm is an epithalamium to Christ and the church, or to the lamb and his spouse. Burnet.

E'PITHEM, ĕp'ĕ-thĕm. n. s. [ἐπίθημα.] A liquid medicament externally applied.

Cordials and epithems are also necessary to resist the putrefaction and strengthen the vitals. Wiseman.

E'PITHET, ĕp'ĕ-thĕt. n. s. [ἐπιθετον.]

1. An adjective denoting any quality good or bad: as, the verdant grove, the craggy mountain's lofty head.

I affirm with phlegm, leaving the epithets of false, scandalous, and villanous, to the author. Swift.

2. It is used by some writers improperly for title, name.

The epithet of shades belonged more properly to the darkness than the refreshment. Dec. of Piety.

3. It is used improperly for phrase, expression.

For which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me?——

Suffer love! a good epithet: I do suffer love indeed; for I love thee against my will. Shaksp.

EPI'TOME, ê-pît'ô-mê. n. s. [ἐπιτομη.] Abridgment; abbreviature; compendious abstract; compendium.

This is a poor epitome of yours,
Which by the interpretation of full time,
May shew like all yourself. Shaksp.

Epitomes are helpful to the memory, and of good private use; but set forth for publick monuments, accuse the industrious writer of delivering much impertinency. Wotton.

It would be well, if there were a short and plain epitome made, containing the most material heads. Locke.

Such abstracts and epitomes may be reviewed in their proper places. Watts.

To EPI'TOMISE, ê-pît'ô-mize. v. a. [from epitome.]

1. To abstract; to contract into a narrow space.

Who did the whole world's soul contract, and drove
Into the glasses of your eyes;
So made such mirrours and such spies,
That they did all to you epitomise. Donne.

If the ladies take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature. Addison.

2. Less properly, to diminish by amputation; to curtail.

We have epitomised many particular words to the detriment of our tongue. Addison.

EPI'TOMISER, ê-pît'ô-mi-zûr. } n. s. [from EPI'TOMIST, ê-pît'ô-mist. } epitomise.] An abridger; an abstracter; a writer of epitomes.

E'POCH, êp'ôk. } n. s. [εποχη.] The
EPO'CHA, êp'ô-kâ. } time at which a new computation is begun; the time from which dates are numbered.

Moses distinctly computes by certain intervals, memorable æras and epochas, or terms of time. Brown.

These are the practices of the world, since the year sixty; the grand epoch of falsehood, as well as debauchery. South.

Some lazy ages, lost in sleep and ease,
No actions leave to busy chronicles:
Such whose supine felicity but makes
In story chasms, in epochas mistakes. Dryden.

The several epochas or beginnings, as from the creation of the world, from the flood, from the first olympiad, from the building of Rome, or from any remarkable passage or accident, give us a pleasant prospect into the histories of antiquity and of former ages. Holder.

Time is always reckoned from some known parts of the sensible world, and from some certain epochs marked out to us by the motions observable in it. Locke.

Time, by necessity compell'd, shall go
Through scenes of war, and epochas of woe. Prior.

EPO'DE, êp'ôde. n. s. [ἐπωδη.] The stanza following the strophe and antistrophe.

EPOPE'E, êp-ô-pê'. n. s. [ἐποποι.] An epic or heroick poem.

Tragedy borrows from the epopee, and that which borrows is of less dignity, because it has not of its own. Dryden.

EPULA'TION, êp-ù-lâ'shûn. n. s. [epulatio, Lat.] Banquet; feast.

Contented with bread and water, when he would dine with Jove, and pretended to epulation, he desired no other addition than a piece of cheese. Brown.

EPULO'TICK, êp-ù-lôt'îk. n. s. [ἐπουλωτικος.] A cicatrizing medicament.

The ulcer, incarned with common sarcoticks, and the ulcerations about it, were cured by ointment of tuty and such like epuloticks. Wiseman.

EQUABI'LITY, ê-kwâ-bîl'ê-tê. n. s. [from equable.] Equality to itself; evenness; uniformity.

For the celestial bodies, the equability and constancy of their motions argue them ordained by wisdom. Ray.

The equability of the temperature of the air rendered the Asiaticks lazy. Arbuthnot.

E'QUABLE, ê'kwâ-bl.[405] adj. [æquabilis, Lat.] Equal to itself; even; uniform in respect to form, motion, or temperature.

He would have the vast body of a planet to be as elegant and round as a factitious globe represents it; to be every where smooth and equable, and as plain as the elysian fields. Bentley.

Nothing abates acrimony of the blood more than an equable motion of it, neither too swift, nor too slow; for too quick a motion produceth an alkaline, and too slow an acid acrimony. Arbuthnot.

E'QUABLY, ê'kwâ-blê. adv. [from equable.] Uniformly; in the same tenour; evenly; equally to itself.

If bodies move equably in concentrick circles, and the squares of their periodical times be as the cubes of their distances from the common centre, their centripetal forces will be reciprocally as the squares of the distances. Cheyne.

E'QUAL, ê'kwâl.[35 88] adj. [æqualis, Lat.]

1. Like another in bulk, excellence, or any other quality that admits comparison; neither greater nor less; neither worse nor better.

If thou be among great men, make not thyself equal with them. Ecclus.

'Equal lot
May join us; equal joy, as equal love. Milton.

Although there were no man to take notice of it, every triangle would contain three angles equal to two right angles. Hale.

2. Adequate to any purpose.

The Scots trusted not their own numbers, as equal to fight with the English. Clarendon.

3. Even; uniform.

He laughs at all the vulgar cares and fears,
At their vain triumphs, and their vainer tears;
An equal temper in his mind he found,
When fortune flatter'd him, and when she frown'd. Dryden.

Think not of me: perhaps my equal mind
May learn to bear the fate the gods allot me. Smith.

4. In just proportion.

It is not permitted me to make my commendation equal to your merit. Dryden.

5. Impartial; neutral.

Each to his proper fortune stand or fall;
Equal and unconcern'd I look on all:
Rutilians, Trojans, are the same to me,
And both shall draw the lots their fates decree. Dryden.

6. Indifferent.

They who are not disposed to receive them, may let them alone, or reject them; it is equal to me. Cheyne.

7. Equitable; advantageous alike to both parties.

He submitted himself, and sware to all equal conditions. Mac.

8. Being upon the same terms.

They made the married, orphans, widows, yea and the aged also, equal in spoils with themselves. Mac.

E'QUAL, ê'kwâl. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. One not inferiour or superiour to another.

He is enamour'd on Hero: I pray you, dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth. Shak.

He would make them all equals to the citizens of Rome. 2 Mac.

Those who were once his equals, envy and defame him, because they now see him their superiour; and those who were once his superiours, because they look upon him as their equal. Addison.

To my dear equal in my native land,
My plighted vow I gave: I his received:
Each swore with truth, with pleasure each believ'd:
The mutual contract was to heav'n convey'd. Prior.

2. One of the same age.

I profited in the Jews religion above many of my equals in mine own nation. Gal.

To E'QUAL, ê'kwâl. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make one thing or person equal to another.

2. To rise to the same state with another person.

I know no body so like to equal him, even at the age he wrote most of them as yourself. Trumbull to Pope.

3. To be equal to.

One whose all not equals Edward's moiety. Shakspeare.

4. To recompense fully; to answer in full proportion.

She sought Sicheus through the shady grove,
Who answer'd all her cares, and equall'd all her love. Dryden.

Nor you, great queen, these offices repent,
Which he will equal, and perhaps augment. Dryd.

To E'QUALISE, ê'kwâ-lize. v. a. [from equal.]

1. To make even.

To equalise accounts we will allow three hundred years, and so long a time as we can manifest from the Scripture. Brown.

2. To be equal to; a sense not used.

That would make the moved body, remaining what it is, in regard of its bigness, to equalise and fit a thing bigger than it is. Digby.

Ye lofty beeches, tell this matchless dame,
That if together ye fed all one flame,
It could not equalise the hundredth part
Of what her eyes have kindled in my heart. Waller.

EQUA'LITY, ê-kwôl'ê-tê.[86] n. s. [from equal.]

1. Likeness with regard to any qualities compared.

Equality of two domestick powers,
Breeds scrupulous faction. Shaksp.

2. The same degree of dignity.

One shall rise,
Of proud ambition; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton.

According to this equality wherein God hath placed all mankind, with relation to himself, in all the relations between man and man there is a mutual dependence. Swift.

3. Evenness; uniformity; constant tenour; equability.

Measure out the lives of men, and periodically define the alterations of their tempers, conceive a regularity in mutations, with an equality in constitutions, and forget that variety which physicians therein discover. Brown.

E'QUALLY, ê'kwâl-lê. adv. [from equal.]

No insect or animal did ever proceed equivocally from putrefaction, unless in miraculous cases; as in Egypt by the divine judgments. Bentley.

EQUI'VOCALNESS, ê-kwîv'vô-kâl-nês. n. s. [from equivocal.] Ambiguity; double meaning.

Distinguish the equivocalness or lassitude of the word, and then point out that determinate part which is the ground of my demonstration. Norris.

To EQUI'VOCATE, ê-kwîv'vô-kâte. v. n. [æquivocatio, Lat.] To use words of double meaning; to use ambiguous expressions; to mean one thing and express another.

Not only Jesuits can equivocate. Dryden.

My soul disdain'd a promise;—
—But yet your false equivocating tongue,
Your looks, your eyes, your ev'ry motion promis'd:
But you are ripe in frauds, and learn'd in falshoods.
Smith.

EQUIVOCA'TION, ê-kwîv-vô-kâ'shûn. n. s. [equivocatio, Latin.] Ambiguity of speech; double meaning.

Reproof is easily misapplied, and, through equivocation, wrested. Hooker.

I pull in resolution and begin
To doubt the equivocation of the fiend
That lies like truth. Shaksp.

EQUIVOCA'TOR, ê-kwîv'vô-kâ-tûr.[521] n. s. [from equivocate.] One who uses ambiguous language; one who uses mental reservation.

Here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; yet could not equivocate to heaven. Shaksp.

ER, êr. A syllable in the middle of names or places, comes by contraction from the Saxon pa̅pa, dwellers Gibson's Camden.

E'RA, ê'râ. n. s. [era, Lat.] The account of time from any particular date or epoch.

From the blessings they bestow
Our times are dated, and our eras move:
They govern, and enlighten all below,
As thou dost all above. Prior.

ERADIA'TION, ê-râ-dê-â'shûn.[534] n. s. [e and radius, Lat.] Emission of radiance.

God gives me a heart humbly to converse with him, from whom alone are all the eradiations of true majesty. King Charles.

To ERA'DICATE, ê-râd'ê-kâte. v. a. [eradico, Lat.]

1. To pull up by the root.

He suffered the poison of Nubia to be gathered, and aconite to be eradicated, yet this not to be moved. Brown.

2. To completely destroy; to end; to cut off.

If a gouty person can bring himself entirely to a milk diet, he may so change the whole juices of his body as to eradicate the distemper. Arbuthnot.

If vice cannot wholly be eradicated it ought at least to be confined to particular objects. Swift.

ERADICA'TION, ê-râd-ê-kâ'shûn. n. s. [from eradicate.]

1. The act of tearing up by the root; destruction; excision.

2. The state of being torn up by the roots.

We have erred and strayed like lost sheep. Common Prayer.

I will not lag behind, nor err
The way, thou leading. Milton.

3. To deviate from any purpose.

But errs not nature from this gracious end,
From burning suns when livid deaths descend. Pope.

4. To commit errours; to mistake.

It is a judgment maim'd and most imperfect,
That will confess perfection so could err,
Against all rules of nature. Shakspeare.

Do they not err that devise evil? Proverbs.

Possibly the man may err in his judgment of circumstances, and therefore let him fear; but because it is not certain he is mistaken, let him not despair. Taylor.

Nor has it only been the heat of erring persons that has been thus mischievous, but sometimes men of right judgments have too much contributed to the breach. Decay of Piety.

The muses' friend, unto himself severe,
With silent pity looks on all that err. Waller.

He who from the reflected image of the sun in water would conclude of light and heat, could not err more grossly. Cheyne.

From them I go
This uncouth errand sole. Milton.

His eyes,
That run through all the heav'ns, or down to th' earth,
Bear his swift errands, over moist and dry,
O'er sea and land. Milton.

Well thou do'st to hide from common sight
Thy close intrigues, too bad to bear the light;
Nor doubt I, but the silver-footed dame,
Tripping from sea, on such an errand came. Dryd.

ERRA'NT, êr'rânt. adj. [errans, Lat. errant, Fr.]

1. Wandering; roving; rambling. Particularly applied to an order of knights much celebrated in romances, who roved about the world in search of adventures.

It was thought that there are just seven planets or errant stars, in the lower orbs of heaven; but it is now demonstrable unto sense, that there are many more. Brown.

Chief of domestick knights and errant,
Either for chartel or for warrant. Hudibras.

2. Vile; abandoned; completely bad. See ARRANT.

Good impertinence:
Thy company, if I slept not very well
A-nights, would make me an errant fool with questions. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

3. Deviating from a certain course.

Knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain,
Fortive and errant, from his course of growth. Shakspeare.

ERRHI'NE, êr-rîn'. n. s. [ἐῤῥινα.] Snuffed up the nose; occasioning sneezing.

We see sage, or betony, bruised, sneezing powder, and other powders or liquors, which the physicians call errhines, put into the nose to draw phlegm from the head. Bacon.

ERRÓ'NEOUS, êr-rô'nê-ûs. adj. [from erro, Lat.]

1. Wandering, unsettled.

They roam
Erroneous and disconsolate, themselves
Accusing, and their chiefs improvident
Of military chance. Philips.

This circle, by being placed here, stopped much of the erroneous light, which otherwise would have disturbed the vision. Newton.

Unblam'd, abundance crown'd the royal board,
What time this done rever'd her prudent lord;

They had th' especial engines been, to rear
His fortunes up. Daniel's Civil War.

ESPE'CIALLY, ès-spêsh'âl-è. adv. [from especial.] Principally; chiefly; particularly; in an uncommon degree above any other.

I somewhat marvel, that they especially should think it absurd to oppose church government, a plain matter of action, unto matter of faith, who know that themselves divide the gospel into doctrine and discipline. Hooker.

Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius! Shakspeare.

This delight children take in doing of mischief, but more especially the pleasure they take to put any thing to pain that is capable of it, I cannot persuade myself to be any other than a foreign and introduced disposition. Locke.

Providence hath planted in all men a natural desire and curiosity of knowing things to come: and such things especially as concern our particular happiness, or the general fate of mankind. Burnet.

ESPERA'NCE, ès-pè-rânse'. n. s. [Fr.] Hope. Not used.

To be worst,
The lowest, most dejected things of fortune,
Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear. Shaks.

Yet there is a credence in my heart,
An esperance so obstinately strong,
That doth invert th' attest of eyes and ears. Shaks.

ESPI'AL, è-spi'âl. n. s. [Fr. from espier.] A spy; a scout; one sent to bring intelligence. Not used.

Those four garrisons, issuing forth at such convenient times as they shall have intelligence, or espial upon the enemy, will drive him from one side to another. Spenser on Ireland.

ESQUI'RE, è-skwire'. n. s. [escuer, Fr.] See SQUIRE.

1. The armour-bearer or attendant on a knight.

2. A title of dignity, next in degree below a knight.

Those to whom this title is now of right due, are all the younger sons of noblemen, and their heirs male for ever; the four esquires of the king's body; the eldest sons of all baronets; so also of all knights of the Bath, and knights bachelors, and their heirs male in the right line; those that serve the king in any worshipful calling, as the serjeant chirurgeon, serjeant of the ewry, master cook, &c. such as are created esquires by the king, with a collar of SS, of silver, as the heralds and serjeants at arms. The chief of some ancient families are likewise esquires by prescription; those that bear any superior office in the commonwealth, as high sheriff of any county, who retains the title of esquire during his life, in respect of the great trust he has had of the posse comitatus. He who is a justice of the peace has it during the time he is in commission, and no longer. Utter barristers, in the acts of parliament for poll-money, were ranked among esquires. Blount.

What are our English dead?
—Sir Richard Ketley, Davy Gam esquire. Shaksp.

To ESSA'Y, ès-sâ'. v. a. [essayer, Fr.]

1. To attempt; to try; to endeavour.

While I this unexampled task essay,
Pass awful gulfs, and beat my painful way,
Celestial dove, divine assistance bring. Blackmore.

No conquests she, but o'er herself desir'd;
No arts essay'd, but not to be admir'd. Pope.

2. To make experiment of.

3. To try the value and purity of metals.

The standard in our mint being now settled, the rules and methods of essaying suited to it should remain unvariable. Locke.

E'SSAY, ès'sâ.[492] n. s. [from the verb. The accent is used on either syllable.]

1. Attempt; endeavour.

Fruitless our hopes, though pious our essays;
Yours to preserve a friend, and mine to praise. Smith.

2. A loose sally of the mind: an irregular indigested piece; not a regular and orderly composition.

My essays, of all my other works, have been most current. Bacon.

Yet modestly he does his works survey,
And calls his finish'd poem an essay.
Poem to Roscommon

3. A trial; an experiment.

This treatise prides itself in no higher a title than that of an essay, or imperfect attempt at a subject. Glanville.

He wrote this but as an essay, or taste of my virtue. Shaksp.

Repetitions wear us into a liking of what possibly, in the first essay, displeased us. Locke.

4. First taste of any thing; first experiment.

Translating the first of Homer's Iliads, I intended as an essay to the whole work. Dryden.

E'SSENCE, ès'sênse. n. s. [essentia, Latin.]

1. Essence is but the very nature of any being, whether it be actually existing or no: a rose in winter has an essence; in summer it has existence also. Watts.

One thinks the soul is air; another, fire;
Another. blood diffus'd about the heart,
Another saith, the elements conspire,
And to her essence each doth give a part. Davies.

I could wish the nature of a spirit were more unknown to me than it is, that I might believe its existence, without meddling at all with its essence.
More's Divine Dialogues.

He wrote the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South.

2. Formal existence; that which makes any thing to be what it is.

The visible church of Jesus is one in outward profession of those things, which supernaturally appertain to the very essence of christianity, and are necessarily required in every particular christian man. Hooker.

3. Existence; the quality of being.

In such cogitations have I stood, with such a darkness and heaviness of mind, that I might have been persuaded to have resigned my very essence.
Sidney.

4. Being; existent person.

As far as gods, and heav'nly essences
Can perish. Milton.

5. Species of existent beings.

Here be four of you, as differing as the four elements; and yet you are friends; as for Eupolis, because he is temperate, and without passion, he may be the fifth essence. Bacon.

6. Constituent substance.

For spirits when they please
Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure;
Not ty'd or manacled with joint or limb. Milton.

7. The cause of existence. This sense is not proper.

She is my essence, and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shaksp.

8. [In medicine.] The chief properties or virtues of any simple, or composition collected in a narrow compass.

9. Perfume; odour; scent.

Our humble province is to 'tend the fair;
To save the powder from too rude a gale,
Nor let th' imprison'd essences exhale. Pope.

To E'SSENCE, ês'sênse. v. a. [from essence.] To perfume; to scent.

The husband rails from morning to night, at essenced fops and tawdry courtiers. Addison.

ESSE'NTIAL, ês-sên'shâl. adj. [essentialis, Lat.]

1. Necessary to the constitution or existence of any thing.

The discipline of our church, although it be not an essential part of our religion, should not be rashly altered, as the very substance of our religion will be interested in it. Bacon.

From that original of doing good, that is essential to the infinite being of our Creator, we have an excellent copy transcribed. Sprat.

This power cannot be innate and essential to matter; and if it be not essential, it is consequently most manifest it could never supervene to it, unless impressed and infused into it by an immaterial and divine power. Bentley.

A great minister puts you a case, and asks your opinion; but conceals an essential circumstance upon which the whole weight of the matter turns. Swift.

And if each system in gradation roll,
Alike essential to the amazing whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall. Pope.

2. Important in the highest degree; principal.

Judgment's more essential to a general
Than courage. Denham.

3. Pure; highly rectified; subtilely elaborated; extracted so as to contain all the virtues of its elemental parts contracted into a narrow compass.

The juice of the seed is an essential oil or balm, designed by nature to preserve the seed from corruption. Arbuthnot.

ESSE'NTIAL, ês-sên'shâl. n. s.

1. Existence; being.

His utmost ire to the height enrag'd,
Will either quite consume us, or reduce
To nothing this essential. Milton.

2. Nature; first or constituent principles.

The plague of sin has even alter'd his nature, and eaten into his very essentials. South.

3. The chief point; that which is in any respect of great importance.

ESSE'NTIALLY, ês-sên'shâl-lê. adv. [essentialiter, Lat.] By the constitution of nature; really; according to the true state of things.

He that loves himself,
Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
The name of valour. Shaksp.

Body and spirit are essentially divided, though not locally distant. Glanville.

All sin essentially is, and must be mortal. South.

Knowledge is that which, next to virtue, truly and essentially raises one man above another. Addison.

ESSO'INE, ês-sôîn'. n. s. [of the French essonié, or exonnié.]

1. He that has his presence forborn or excused upon any just cause: as sickness.

2. Allegement of an excuse for him that is summoned, or sought for, to appear and answer to an action real, or to perform suit to a court-baron upon just cause of absence. Cowell.

3. Excuse; exemption.

From every work he challenged essoin,
For contemplation sake; yet otherwise
His life he led in lawless riotise. Fairy Queen.

To ESTA'BLISH, ê-stâb'lîsh. v. a. [etablir, French.]

1. To settle firmly; to fix unalterably.

He may establish thee to-day for a people unto himself. Deuteronomy.

I will establish my covenant with him for an everlasting covenant. Genesis.

The Normans never obtained this kingdom by such a right of conquest, as did or might alter the established laws of the kingdom. Hale.

2. To settle in any privilege or possession; to confirm.

Soon after the rebellion broke out, the presbyterian sect was established in all its forms by an ordinance of the lords and commons. Swift.

3. To make firm; to ratify.

Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the soul, her husband may establish it, or her husband may make it void. Numbers.

4. To fix or settle in an opinion.

So were the churches established in the faith. Acts.

For he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods. Psalms.

7. To make a settlement of any inheritance. A sense not in use.

We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland. Shaksp.

ESTA'BLISHER, ê-stâb'lîsh-ûr. n. s. [from establish.] He who establishes.

I reverence the holy fathers as divine establishers of faith. L. Digby.

ESTA'BLISHMENT, ê-stâb'lîsh-mênt. n. s. [from establish; etablissement, Fr.]

1. Settlement; fixed state.

All happy peace, and goodly government,
Is settled there in sure establishment. Fairy Queen.

2. Confirmation of something already done; ratification.

He had not the act penned by way of recognition of right; as, on the other side, he avoided to have it by a new law; but chose rather a kind of middle way, by way of establishment. Bacon.

3. Settled regulation; form; model of a government of family.

Now come into that general reformation, and bring in that establishment by which all men should be contained in duty. Spenser.

4. Foundation; fundamental principle; settled law.

The sacred order to which you belong, and even the establishment on which it subsists, have often been struck at; but in vain. Atterbury.

5. Allowance; income; salary.

His excellency, who had the sole disposal of the emperor's revenue, might gradually lessen your establishment. Swift.

6. Settled or final rest.

Whilst we set up our hopes and establishment here, we do not seriously consider that God has provided another and better place for us. Wake.

ESTA'TE, ê-stâte'. n. s. [estat, Fr.]

1. The general interest; the business of the government; the publick. In this sense it is now commonly written state.

Many times the things adduced to judgment may be meum & tuum, when the reason and consequence thereof may reach to point of estate; I call matters of estate not only in the parts of sovereiguty, but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration, or dangerous precedent, or concerneth manifestly any great portion of people. Bacon.

2. Condition of life, with regard to prosperity or adversity.

Thanks to giddy chance,
She cast us headlong from our high estate. Dryden.

3. Condition; circumstances in general.

Truth and certainty are not at all secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain, floating estate with as without them. Locke.

4. Fortune; possession: generally meant of possessions in land, or realities.

She accused us to the king, as though we went about to overthrow him in his own estate. Sidney.

Go, miser! go: for lucre sell thy soul;
Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole,
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See what a vast estate he left his son! Dryden.

5. Rank; quality.

Who hath not heard of the greatness of your estate? Who seeth not that your estate is much excelled with that sweet uniting of all beauties. Sidney.

6. A person of high rank. Disused.

She is a dutchess, a great estate. Latimer.

Herod, on his birth-day, made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee. Mark.

To ESTA'TE, ê-stâte'. v. a. [from the noun.] To settle as a fortune.

Why hath thy queen
Summon'd me hither?
—A contract of true love to celebrate,
And some donation freely to estate
On the blest lovers. Shaksp.

To ESTE'EM, ê-stêêm'. v. a. [estimer, Fr. æstimo, Lat.]

1. To set a value whether high or low upon any thing.

The worth of all men by their end esteem,
And then due praise, or due reproach them yield. Spenser.

A knowledge in the works of nature they honour, and esteem highly profound wisdom; howbeit this wisdom saveth not. Hooker.

I preferred her before sceptres and thrones, and esteemed riches nothing in comparison of her. Wisdom.

2. To compare; to estimate by proportion.

Besides, those single forms she doth esteem,
And in her balance doth their values try. Davies.

3. To prize; to rate high; to regard with reverence.

Who would not be loved more, though he were esteemed less? Dryden.

4. To hold in opinion; to think; to imagine.

One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Romans.

To ESTE'EM, ê-stêêm'. v. n. To consider as to value: with of.

Many would little esteem of their own lives, yet for remorse of their wives and children, would be withheld from that heinous crime. Spenser.

ESTE'EM, ê-stêêm'. n. s. [from the verb.] High value; reverential regard.

Who can see,
Without esteem for virtuous poverty,
Severe Fabritius, or can cease t' admire
The ploughman consul in his coarse attire? Dryden.

Both those poets lived in much esteem with good and holy men in orders. Dryden.

I am not uneasy that many, whom I never had any esteem for, are likely to enjoy this world after me. Pope.

ESTE'EMER, ê-stêêm'ûr. n. s. [from es- teem.] One that highly values; one that sets a high rate upon any thing.

This might instruct the proudest esteemer of his own parts, how useful it is to talk and consult with others. Locke.

E'STIMABLE, ês'tê-mâ-bl.[405] adj. [Fr.]

1. Valuable; worth a large price.

A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man,
Is not so estimable or profitable
As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats. Shaksp.

2. Worthy of esteem; worthy of some degree of honour and respect.

A lady said of her two companions, that one was more amiable, the other more estimable.

You lost one who gave hopes of being, in time, every thing that was estimable and good. Temple.

E'STIMABLENESS, ês'tê-mâ-bl-nês. n. s. [from estimable.] The quality of deserving regard.

To E'STIMATE, ês'tê-mâte. v. a. [æstimo, Lat.]

1. To rate; to adjust the value of; to judge of any thing by its proportion to something else.

When a man shall sanctify his house to the Lord, then the priest shall estimate it whether it be good or bad: as the priest shall estimate it, so shall it stand. Leviticus.

It is by the weight of silver, and not the name of the piece, that men estimate commodities and exchange them. Locke.

2. To calculate; to compute.

E'STIMATE, ês'tê-mâte.[91] n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Computation; calculation.

Upon a moderate estimate and calculation of the quantity of water now actually contained in the abyss, I found that this alone was full enough to cover the whole globe to the height assigned by Moses. Woodward.

2. Value.

I'd love
My country's good, with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound than mine own life,
My dear wife's estimate, her womb's increase,
The treasure of my loins. Shaksp.

3. Valuation; assignment of proportional value; comparative judgment.

The only way to come to a true estimate upon the odds betwixt a publick and a private life, is to try both. L'Estrange.

Outward actions can never give a just estimate of us, since there are many perfections of a man which are not capable of appearing in actions. Addison.

ESTIMA'TION, ês-tê-mâ'shûn. n. s. [from estimate.]

1. The act of adjusting proportional value.

If a man should sanctify unto the Lord some part of a field, the estimation shall be according to the seed. Leviticus.

2. Calculation; computation.

3. Opinion; judgment.

In our own estimation we account such particulars more worthy than those that are already tried and known. Bacon.

4. Esteem; regard; honour.

Crimes there were laid to his charge many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit with men. Hooker.

Of your brace of unprizable estimations, the one is but frail, and the other casual. Shaksp.

I know the gentleman
To be of worth and worthy estimation,
And not without desert so well reputed. Shaksp.

I shall have estimation among the multitude, and honour with the elders. Wisdom.

A plain reason of the publick honours due to the magistrate is, that he may be in due estimation and reverence. Atterbury.

E'STIMATIVE, ês'tê-mâ-tiv.[512] adj. [from estimate.] Having the power of comparing and adjusting the preference.

We find in animals an estimative or judicial faculty, an appetition or aversation, and loco-motive faculty answering the will. Hale.

The error is not in the eye, but in the estimative faculty, which mistakingly concludes that colour to belong to the wall, which indeed belongs to the object. Boyle.

ESTIMA'TOR, ês-tê-mâ'tûr.[521] n. s. [from estimate.] A settler of rates; a computist.

To ESTRA'NGE, ê-stranje'. v. a. [estranger, Fr.]

1. To keep at a distance; to withdraw.

Had we not only cut off their corruptions, but also estranged ourselves from them in things indifferent, who seeth not how greatly prejudicial this might have been to so good a cause? Hooker.

They know it is our custom of simple reading, not for conversion of infidels estranged from the house of God, but for instruction of men baptized, bred, and brought up in the bosom of the church. Hooker.

See, she weeps;
Thinks me unkind, or false, and knows not why
I thus estrange my person from her bed. Dryden.

2. To alienate; to divert from its original use or possessor.

They have estranged this place, and have burnt incense in it to other gods. Jeremiah.

3. To alienate from affection; to turn from kindness to malevolence or indifference.

How comes it now, my husband, oh, how comes it,
That thou art thus estranged from thyself?
Thyself I call it, being strange to me. Shaksp.

Adam, estrang'd in look, and alter'd style,
Speech intermitted, thus to Eve renew'd. Milton.

I came to grieve a father's heart estrang'd;
But little thought to find a mistress chang'd. Dryd.

I do not know, to this hour, what it is that has estranged him from me. Pope.

4. To withdraw or withhold.

We must estrange our belief from every thing which is not clearly and distinctly evidenced. Glanville.

ESTRANGE'MENT, ê-stranje'mênt. n. s. [from estrange.] Alienation; distance; removal; voluntary abstraction.

Desires, by a long estrangement from better things, come at length perfectly to loath, and fly off from them. South.

ESTRAPA'DE, ês-trâ-pâde'. n. s. [Fr.] The defence of a horse that will not obey, who to get rid of his rider, rises mightily before; and while his forehand is yet in the air, yerks furiously with his hind legs. Farrier's Dict.

ESTRE'ATE, ês-tráte'. n. s. [extractum, Lat.] The true copy of an original writing; for example, of amerciaments or penalties, set down in the rolls of a court, to be levied by the bailiff, or other officer, of every man for his offence. A law term. Cowell.

ESTRE'PEMENT, ê-strêp'mênt. n. s. [of the French word estrepier.] Spoil made by the tenant for term of life upon any lands or woods, to the prejudice of him in the reversion. Cowell.

E'STRICH, ês'trîtsh. n. s. [commonly written ostrich; struthiocamelus.] The largest of birds.

To be furious,
Is to be frighted out of fear; and, in that mood,
The dove will peck the estridge. Shaksp.

The peacock, not at thy command, assumes
His glorious train; nor estrich her rare plumes. Sandys.

E'STUANCE, ês'tshû-ânse. n. s. Heat; warmth. A word rarely found.

Averroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incalescence, and regulated estuance from wine. Brown.

E'STUARY, ês'tshû-â-rê.[461] n. s. [æstuarium, Lat.] An arm of the sea; the mouth of a lake or river in which the tide reciprocates; a frith.

To E'STUATE, ês'tshû-âte.[91] v. a. [æstuo, Lat.] To swell and fall reciprocally; to boil; to be in a state of violent commotion. Dict.

ESTUA'TION, ês-tshû-â'shûn. n. s. [from æstuo, Lat.] The state of boiling; reciprocation of rise and fall; agitation; commotion.

Rivers and lakes that want fermenting parts at the bottom, are not excited into estuations; therefore some seas flow higher than others. Brown.

The motion of the will is accompanied with a sensible commotion of the spirits, and an estuation of the blood. Norris.

E'STURE, ês'tshûre. n. s. [æstus, Latin.] Violence; commotion.

The seas retain
Not only their outrageous esture there,
But supernatural mischief they expire. Chapman.

ESU'RIENT, ê-zû'rê-ênt.[479] adj. [esuriens, Lat.] Hungry; voracious. Dict.

E'SURINE, êzh'û-rine.[479] adj. [esurio, Lat.] Corroding; eating.

Over much piercing is the air of Hampstead, in which sort of air there is always something esurine and acid. Wiseman.

ETC, êt-sêt'ê-râ. A contraction of the two Latin words et cætera, which signifies, and so on; and the rest; and others of the like kind.

To ETCH, êtsh. v. a. [etzen, German.]

1. A way used in making of prints by drawing with a proper needle upon a copper-plate, covered over with a ground of wax, &c. and well blacked with the smoke of a link, in order to take off the figure of the drawing or print; which having its backside tinctured with white lead, will, by running over the strucken out lines with a stift, impress the exact figure on the black or red ground; which figure is afterwards with needles drawn deeper quite through the ground, and all the shadows and hatchings put in; and then a wax border being made all round the plate, there is poured on a sufficient quantity of well tempered aqua fortis, which insinuating into the strokes made by the needles, usually eats, in about half an hour, into the figure of the print or drawing on the copper-plate. Harris.

2. To sketch; to draw; to delineate: [unless this word be mistaken by Locke for eke.]

There are many empty terms to be found in some learned writers, to which they had recourse to etch out their systems. Locke.

3. [This word is evidently mistaken by Ray for edge.] To move forward toward one side.

When we lie long awake in the night, we are not able to rest one quarter of an hour without shifting of sides, or at least etching this way and that way, more or less. Ray.

ETCH, ĕtsh. n. s. A country word of which I know not the meaning.

When they sow their etch crops, they sprinkle a pound or two of clover on an acre. Mortimer.

Where you find dunging of land makes it rank, lay dung upon the etch, and sow it with barley. Mortimer.

ETE'RNAL, ê-têr'nâl. adj. [æternus, Latin.]

1. Without beginning or end.

The eternal God is thy refuge. Deuter.

2. Without beginning.

It is a question quite different from our having an idea of eternity, to know whether there were any real being, whose duration has been eternal? Locke.

3. Without end; endless; immortal.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives.
—But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shaksp.

4. Perpetual; constant; unintermitting.

Burnt off'rings morn and ev'ning shall be thine,
And fires eternal in thy temple shine. Dryden.

5. Unchangeable.

Hobbes believed the eternal truths which he opposed. Dryden.

ETE'RNAL, ê-têr'nâl. n. s. [eternel, Fr.] One of the appellations of the Godhead.

That law whereby the Eternal himself doth work. Hooker.

The Eternal, to prevent such horrid fray,
Hung out of heav'n his golden scales. Milton.

ETE'RNALIST, ê-têr'nâl-lîst. n. s. [æternus, Lat.] One that holds the past existence of the world infinite.

I would ask the eternalist what mark is there that they could expect to desire of the novelty of a world, that is not found in this? Or what mark is there of eternity that is found in this? Burnet.

To ETE'RNALIZE, ê-têr'nâl-lize. v. a. [from eternal.] To make eternal. Dict.

ETE'RNALLY, ê-têr'nâl-lê. adv. [from eternal.]

1. Without beginning or end.

2. Unchangeably; invariably.

That which is morally good, or evil, at any time, or in any case, must be also eternally and unchangeably so, with relation to that time and to that case. South.

3. Perpetually; without intermission.

Bear me, some god, to Baja's gentle seats,
Or cover me in Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside,
And all the seasons lavish all their pride. Addison.

ETE'RNE, ê-têrn'. adj. [æternus, Latin.] Eternal; perpetual; endless.

The Cyclops hammers fall
On Mars his armour, forg'd for proof eterne. Shak.

ETE'RNITY, ê-tér'nê-tê. n. s. [æternitas, Lat.]

1. Duration without beginning or end.

In this ground his precious root
Still lives, which, when weak times shall be pour'd out
Into eternity, and circular joys
Dancing an endless round, again shall rise. Crashaw.

Thy immortal rhyme
Makes up this one short point of time,
To fill up half the orb of round eternity. Cowley.

By repeating the idea of any length of duration which we have in our minds, with all the endless addition of number, we come by the idea of eternity. Locke.

2. Duration without end.

Beyond is all abyss,
Eternity, whose end no eye can reach! Milton.
Eternity, thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untried being,
Through what new scenes and changes must we pass! Addison.

To ETE'RNIZE, ê-têr'nize. v. a. [æterno, Lat.]

1. To make endless; to perpetuate.

I with two fair gifts
Created him endow'd: with happiness,
And immortality; that fondly lost,
This other serv'd but to eternize woe. Milton.

2. To make for ever famous; to immortalize.

Mankind by all means seeking to eternize himself, so much the more as he is near his end, doth it by speeches and writings. Sidney.

And well beseems all knights of noble name,
That covet in th' immortal book of fame,
To be eternized, that same to haunt. F. Queen.

I might relate of thousands, and their names,
Eternize here on earth; but those elect
Angels, contented with their fame in heav'n,
Seek not the praise of men. Milton.

The four great monarchies have been celebrated by the writings of many famous men, who have eternized their fame, and thereby their own. Temple.

Both of them are set on fire by the great actions of heroes, and both endeavour to eternize them. Dryden.

3. Creech seems to have accented the first syllable.

Hence came its name, in that the grateful Jove
Hath eterniz'd the glory of his love. Creech.

E'THER, ê'*th*êr. n s. [æther, Lat. αἰθηρ.]

1. An element more fine and subtile than air; air refined or sublimed.

If any one should suppose that ether, like our air, may contain particles which endeavour to recede from one another; for I do not know what this ether is; and that its particles are exceedingly smaller than those of air, or even than those of light, the exceeding smallness of its particles may contribute to the greatness of the force by which those particles may recede from one another Newton.

The parts of other bodies are held together by the eternal pressure of the ether, and can have no other conceivable cause of their cohesion and union. Locke.

2. The matter of the highest regions above.

There fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below. Dryden.

ETHE'REAL, ê-*th*ê'rê-âl.[88] adj. [from ether.]

1. Formed of ether.

Man feels me, when I press th' ethereal plains. Dryden.

2. Celestial; heavenly.

Go, heav'nly guest, ethereal messenger,
Sent from whose sov'reign goodness I adore. Milt.

Thrones and imperial pow'rs, offspring of Heav'n, Ethereal virtues. Milton.

Such as these, being in good part freed from the entanglements of sense and body, are employed, like the spirits above, in contemplating the Divine Wisdom in the works of nature; a kind of anticipation of the ethereal happiness and employment. Glanville.

Vast chain of being, which from God began,
Nature's ethereal, human; angel, man. Pope.

ETHE'REOUS, ê-*th*ê'rê-ûs. adj. [from ether.] Formed of ether; heavenly.

Behold the bright surface
Of this ethereous mould, whereon we stand. Milton.

E'THICAL, ê*th*'ê-kâl.[88] adj. [ἠθικὸς.] Moral; treating on morality.

E'THICALLY, ê*th*'ê-kâl-ê. adv. [from ethical.] According to the doctrines of morality.

My subject leads me not to discourse ethically, but christianly of the faults of the tongue. Gov. of the Tongue.

E'THICK, ê*th*'îk. adj. [ἠθικὸς.] Moral; delivering precepts of morality. Whence Pope entitled part of his works Ethick Epistles.

E'THICKS, ê*th*'îks. n. s. without the singular. [ἠθικὴ.] The doctrine of morality; a system of morality.

For of all moral virtues, she was all
That ethicks speak of virtues cardinal. Donne.

I will never set politicks against ethicks; for true ethicks are but as a handmaid to divinity and religion. Bacon.

Persius professes the stoick philosophy; the most generous amongst all the sects who have given rules of ethicks. Dryden.

If the atheists would live up to the ethicks of Epicurus himself, they would make few or no proselytes from the christian religion. Bentley.

E'THNICK, ê*th*'nîk. adj. [ἐθνικὸς.] Heathen; pagan; not Jewish; not christian.

Such contumely as the ethnick world durst not offer him, is the peculiar insolence of degenerated christians. Gov. of the Tongue.

I shall begin with the agreement of profane, whether Jewish or ethnick, with the sacred writings. Grew.

E'THNICKS, ê*th*'nîks. n. s. Heathens; not Jews; not christians.

This first Jupiter of the ethnicks was then the same Cain, the son of Adam. Raleigh.

ETHOLO'GICAL, ê*th*-ô-lôdje'ê-kâl.[530] adj. [ἦθος and λόγος.] Treating of morality.

ETIO'LOGY, ê-tê-ôl'ô-jê. n. s. [αἰτιολογία.] An account of the causes of any thing, generally of a distemper.

I have not particulars enough to enable me to enter into the etiology of this distemper. Arbuthnot.

ETYMOLO'GICAL, êt-ê-mô-lôdje'ê-kâl. adj. [from etymology.] Relating to etymology; relating to the derivation of words.

Excuse this conceit, this etymological observation. Locke.

ETYMO'LOGIST, êt-ê-môl'ô-jîst. n. s. [from etymology.] One who searches out the original of words; one who shows the derivation of words from their original.

ETYMO'LOGY, êt-ê-môl'ô-jê. n. s. [etymologia, Latin; ἔτυμος and λόγος.]

1. The descent or derivation of a word from its original; the deduction of formations from the radical word; the analysis of compound words into primitives.

Consumption is generally taken for any universal diminution and colliquation of the body, which acceptation its etymology implies. Harvey.

When words are restrained, by common usage, to a particular sense, to run up to etymology, and construe them by dictionary, is wretchedly ridiculous. Collier.

Pelvis is used by comick writers for a looking-glass, by which means the etymology of the word is visible, and pelvidera will signify a lady who looks in her glass. Addison.

If the meaning of a word could be learned by its derivation or etymology, yet the original derivation of words is oftentimes very dark. Watts.

2. The part of grammar which delivers the inflections of nouns and verbs.

E'TYMON, ĕ'tĕ-mŏn. n. s. [ἔτυμον.] Origin; primitive word.

Blue hath its etymon from the High Dutch blaw; from whence they call himmel-blue, that which we call sky-colour or heaven's blue. Peacham.

To EVA'CATE, ĕ-vā'kāte. v. a. [vaco, Lat.] To empty out; to throw out.

Dry air opens the surface of the earth to disincarcerate venene bodies, or to evacate them. Harvey.

To EVA'CUATE, ĕ-vāk'ū-āte. v. a. [evacuo, Lat.]

1. To make empty; to clear.

There is no good way of prevention but by evacuating clean, and emptying the church. Hooker.

We tried how far the air would manifest its gravity in so thin a medium, as we could make in our receiver, by evacuating it. Boyle.

2. To throw out as noxious or offensive.

3. To void by any of the excretory passages.

Boerhaave gives an instance of a patient, who by a long use of whey and water, and garden fruits, evacuated a great quantity of black matter, and recovered his senses. Arbuthnot.

4. To make void; to evacate; to nullify; to annul.

The defect, though it would not evacuate a marriage, after cohabitation and actual consummation; yet it was enough to make void a contract. Bacon.

If the prophecies recorded of the Messiah are not fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth, it is impossible to know when a prophecy is fulfilled, and when not, in any thing or person whatsoever, which would utterly evacuate the use of them. South.

5. To quit; to withdraw from out of a place.

As this neutrality was never observed by the emperour, so he never effectually evacuated Catalonia. Swift.

EVA'CUANT, ĕ-vāk'ū-ānt. n. s. [evacuans, Lat.] Medicine that procures evacuation by any passage.

EVACUA'TION, ĕ-vāk-ū-ā'shŭn. n. s. [from evacuate.]

1. Such emissions as leave a vacancy; discharge.

Consider the vast evacuations of men that England hath had by assistances lent to foreign kingdoms. Hale.

2. Abolition; nullification.

Popery hath not been able to re-establish itself in any place, after provision made against it, by utter evacuation of all Romish ceremonies. Hooker.

3. The practice of emptying the body by physick.

The usual practice of physick among us, turns in a manner wholly upon evacuation, either by bleeding, vomit, or some purgation. Temple.

4. Discharges of the body by any vent natural or artificial.

To EVA'DE, ĕ-vāde'. v. a. [evado, Lat.]

1. To elude; to escape by artifice or stratagem.

In this point charge him home, that he effects
Tyrannick power: if he evade us there,
Inforce him with his envy to the people. Shaksp.

If thou covet death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be forestall'd. Milton.

He might evade the accomplishment of these afflictions he now gradually endureth. Brown.

2. To avoid; to decline by subterfuge.

Our question thou evad'st; how did'st thou dare
To break hell bounds? Dryden.

3. To escape or elude by sophistry.

My argument evidently overthrows all that he brings to evade the testimonies of the fathers. Stillingfleet.

4. To escape as imperceptible or unconquerable, as too great or too subtle to be seized or subdued.

We have seen how a contingent event baffles man's knowledge and evades his power. South.

To EVA'DE, ĕ-vāde'. v. n.

1. To escape; to slip away. It is now used with from.

His wisdom, by often evading from perils, was turned rather into dexterity to deliver himself from dangers, than into a providence to prevent. Bacon.

Unarm'd they might
Have easily, as spirits, evaded swift
By quick contraction, or remove. Milton.

2. To practise sophistry or evasions.

The ministers of God are not to evade or take refuge in any of these two forementioned ways. South.

EVAGA'TION, ĕv-ā-gā'shŭn.[530] n. s. [evagor, Lat.] The act of wandering; excursion; ramble; deviation.

These long chains of lofty mountains, which run through whole continents east and west, serve to stop the evagation of the vapours to the north and south in hot countries. Ray.

EVANE'SCENT, ĕv-ā-nĕs'sĕnt. adj. [evanescens, Lat.] Vanishing; imperceptible; lessening beyond the perception of the senses.

The canal grows still smaller and slenderer, so as that the evanescent solid and fluid will scarce differ. Arbuthnot.

The difference between right and wrong, on some petty cases, is almost evanescent. Wollaston.

The downy orchard, and the melting pulp
Of mellow fruit, the nameless nations feed
Of evanescent insects. Thomson

EVANGE'LICAL, ĕ-vān-jĕl'ĕ-kāl. adj. [evangélique, Fr. evangelicus, Lat.]

1. Agreeable to gospel; consonant to the christian law revealed in the holy gospel.

This distinction between moral goodness and evangelical perfection, ought to have been observed. Atterbury.

God will indeed judge the world in righteousness; but 'tis by an evangelical, not a legal righteousness, and by the intervention of the man Christ Jesus, who is the Saviour as well as the Judge of the world. Atterbury.

2. Contained in the gospel.

Those evangelical hymns they allow not to stand in our liturgy. Hooker.

EVA'NGELISM, ĕ-vān'jĕ-lĭzm. n. s. [from evangely.] The promulgation of the blessed gospel.

Thus was this land saved from infidelity, through the apostolical and miraculous evangelism. Bacon.

EVA'NGELIST, ĕ-vān'jĕ-list. n. s. [εὐαγγελιστὴς]

1. A writer of the history of our Lord Jesus.

Each of these early writers ascribe to the four evangelists by name their respective histories. Addis.

2. A promulgator of the christian laws.

Those to whom he first entrusted the promulgating of the gospel, had instructions; and it were fit our new evangelists should show their authority. Decay of Piety.

To EVA'NGELIZE, ĕ-vān'jĕ-lize. v. a. [evangelizo, Lat. εὐαγγελίζω.] To instruct in the gospel, or law of Jesus.

The spirit
Pour'd first on his apostles, whom he sends
T' evangelize the nations; then on all

8. EVER a. [as ever y, that is, evep ich or ever each is each one, all.] Any. This word is still retained in the Scotish dialect.

I am old, I am old.
—I love thee better than I love e'er a scurvy young boy of them all. Shaksp.

9. It is often contracted into e'er.

10. It is much used in composition in the sense of always: as, evergreen, green throughout the year; everduring, enduring without end. It is added almost arbitrarily to neutral participles and adjectives, and will be sufficiently explained by the following instances:

EVERBU'BBLING, êv-ûr-bûb'bling. adj. [ever and bubbling.] Boiling up with perpetual murmurs.

Panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast,
That everbubbling spring. Crashaw.

EVERBU'RNING, êv-ûr-bûrn'ing. adj. [ever and burning.] Unextinguished.

His tail was stretched out in wond'rous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it raught;
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The everburning lamps from thence it brought.
Spenser.

Torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
With everburning sulphur unconsum'd. Milton.

EVERDU'RING, êv-ûr-dû'ring.[410] adj. [ever and during.] Eternal; enduring without end.

Our souls, piercing through the impurity of flesh, behold the highest heavens, and thence bring knowledge to contemplate the everduring glory and termless joy. Raleigh.

Heav'n open'd wide
Her everduring gates, harmonious sound!
On golden hinges moving. Milton.

EVERGRE'EN, êv-ûr-grêên'. adj. [ever and green.] Verdant throughout the year.

There will I build him
A monument, and plant it round with shade
Of laurel, evergreen, and branching palm. Milton.

EXA'CTER, ĕgz-ăk'tŭr.[98] n. s. [from exact.]

1. Extortioner; one who claims more than his due, or claims his due with outrage and severity.

The poller and exacter of fees justifies the common resemblance of the courts of justice to the bush, whereunto while the sheep flies for defence in weather, he is sure to lose part of the fleece. Bacon.

I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exacters righteousness. Isaiah.

2. He that demands by authority.

Light and lewd persons, especially that the exacter of the oath did neither use exhortation, nor examining of them for taking thereof, were easily suborned to make an affidavit for money. Bacon.

3. One who is severe in his injunctions or his demands.

No men are prone to be greater tyrants, and more rigorous exacters upon others, than such whose pride was formerly least disposed to the obedience of lawful constitutions. King Charles.

The grateful person being still the most severe exacter of himself, not only confesses, but proclaims his debts. South.

There is no way to deal with this man of reason, this rigid exacter of strict demonstration for things which are not capable of it. Tillotson.

EXA'CTION, ĕgz-ăk'shŭn. n. s. [from exact.]

1. The act of making an authoritative demand, or levying by force.

If he should break his day, what should I gain
By the exaction of the forfeiture? Shaksp.

2. Extortion; unjust demand.

They vent reproaches
Most bitterly on you, for putter-on
Of these exactions. Shaksp.

Remove violence and spoil, and execute judgment and justice; take away your exactions from my people. Ezekiel.

As the first earl did first raise the greatness of that house, by Irish exactions and oppressions; so Girald the last earl did at last ruin it by the like extortions. Davies.

3. A tribute severely levied.

They have not made bridges over the rivers for the convenience of their subjects as well as strangers, who pay an unreasonable exaction at every ferry upon the least using of the waters. Addison.

EXA'CTLY, ĕgz-ăkt'lĕ. adv. [from exact.] Accurately; nicely; thoroughly.

Both of 'em knew mankind exactly well; for both of 'em began that study in themselves. Dryden.

The religion they profess is such, that the more exactly it is sifted by pure unbiassed reason, the more reasonable still it will be found. Atterbury.

EXA'CTNESS, ĕgz-ăkt'nĕs. n. s. [from exact.]

1. Accuracy; nicety; strict conformity to rule or symmetry.

The experiments were all made with the utmost exactness and circumspection. Woodward.

In wit, as nature, what affects our hearts
Is not th' exactness of peculiar parts;
'Tis not a lip, or eye, we beauty call,
But the joint force and full result of all. Pope.

The balance must be held by a third hand, who is to deal power with the utmost exactness into the several scales. Swift.

2. Regularity of conduct; strictness of manners; care not to deviate.

I preferred not the outward peace of my kingdoms with men, before that inward exactness of conscience before God. King Charles.

They think that their exactness in one duty will atone for their neglect of another. Rogers.

To EXA'GGERATE, ĕgz-ădje'ĕ-rāte. v. a. [exaggero, Lat.]

1. To heap upon; to accumulate.

In the great level near Thorney, several oaks and firs stand in firm earth below the moor, and have lain there hundreds of years, still covered by the fresh and salt waters and moorish earth exaggerated upon them. Hale.

2. To heighten by representation; to enlarge by hyperbolical expressions.

He had exaggerated, as pathetically as he could, the sense the people generally had, even despair of ever seeing an end of the calamities. Clarendon.

A friend exaggerates a man's virtues, an enemy inflames his crimes. Addison.

EXAGGERA'TION, ĕgz-ădje-ĕ-rā'shŭn. n. s. [from exaggerate.]

1. The act of heaping together; a heap; an accumulation.

Some towns that were anciently havens and ports, are now, by exaggeration of sand between these towns and the sea, converted into firm land. Hale.

To E'XCAVATE, ĕks-kā'vâte. v. a. [excavo, Lat.] To hollow; to cut into hollows.

The cups, gilt with a golden border about the brim, were of that wonderful smallness, that Faber put a thousand of them into an excavated peppercorn. Ray on the Creation.

Though nitrous tempests, and clandestine death,
Fill'd the deep caves, and num'rous vaults beneath,
Which form'd with art, and wro[ught] with endless toil,
Ran through the faithless excavated soil,
See the unweary'd Briton delves [his] way,
And to the caverns lets in war and day. Blackmore.

Flat thecæ, some like hats, some like buttons, excavated in the middle. Derham's Phis. Theo.

EXCAVA'TION, ĕks-kă-vā'shŭn. n. s. [from excavate.]

1. The act of cutting into hollows.

2. The hollow formed; the cavity.

While our eye measures the eminent and the hollow parts of pillars, the total object appeareth the bigger; and so, as much as those excavations do subtract, is supplied by a fallacy of the sight. Wotton's Architecture.

To EXCE'ED, ĕk-sēēd'. v. a. [excedo, Latin.]

To EXCE'L, ĕk-sĕl'. v. a. [excello, Lat.] To outgo in good qualities, to surpass.

Venus her myrtle, Phœbus has his bays;
Tea both excels, which you vouchsafe to praise. Waller.

How heroes rise, how patriots set,
Thy father's bloom and death may tell;
Excelling others, these were great;
Thou greater still, must these excel. Prior.

To EXCE'L, ĕk-sĕl'. v. n. To have good qualities in a great degree; to be eminent; to be great.

Then to Silvia let us sing,
That Silvia is excelling. Shakspeare.

Reuben, unstable as water, thou shalt not excel. Genesis.

It is not only in order of nature for him to govern, that is the more intelligent; but there is no less required, courage to protect, and, above all, honesty and probity to abstain from injury: so fitness to govern is a perplexed business Some men, some nations, excel in the one ability, some in the other. Bacon's Holy War.

Company are to be avoided that are good for nothing; those to be sought and frequented that excel in some quality or other. Temple.

He match'd their beauties where they most excel,
Of love sung better, and of arms as well. Dryden.

Let those teach others who themselves excel;
And censure freely, who have written well. Pope.

E'XCELLENCE, ĕk'sĕl-lĕnse } n. s. [ex-
E'XCELLENCY, ĕk'sĕl-lĕn-sē. } cellence, French; excellentia, Latin.]

1. The state of abounding in any good quality.

2. Dignity; high rank in existence.

Is it not wonderful, that base desires should so extinguish in men the sense of their own excellency, as to make them willing that their souls should be like the souls of beasts, mortal and corruptible with their bodies? Hooker.

I know not why a fiend may not deceive a creature of more excellency than himself, but yet a creature. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

3. The state of excelling in any thing.

I have, amongst men of parts and business, seldom heard any one commended for having an excellency in musick. Locke.

4. That in which one excels.

The criticisms have been made rather to discover beauties and excellencies than their faults and imperfections. Addison.

5. Purity; goodness.

She loves him with that excellence,
That angels love good men with. Shakspeare.

6. A title of honour. It is now usually applied to generals of an army, ambassadours, and governours.

That was excellently observed, says I, when I read a passage in an author, where his opinion agrees with mine. Swift.

2. To an eminent degree.

Comedy is both excellently instructive and extremely pleasant; satire lashes vice into reformation; and humour represents folly, so as to render it ridiculous. Dryden.

To EXCE'PT. ĕk-sĕpt'. v. a. [excipio, Latin.]

1. To leave out, and specify as left out of a general precept, or position.

But when he saith, All things are put under him, it is manifest, that he is excepted which did put all things under him. Corinthians.

Adam behold
Th' effects which thy original crime hath wrought
In some to spring from thee, who never touch'd
Th' excepted tree. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To EXCE'PT. ĕk-sĕpt'. v. n. To object; to make objections.

A succession which our author could not except against. Locke.

EXCE'PT, ĕk-sĕpt'. prep. [from the verb. This word, long taken as a preposition or conjunction, is originally the participle passive of the verb; which, like most others, had for its participle two terminations, except or excepted. All, except one, is all, one excepted. Except may likewise be, according to the Teutonick idiom, the imperative mood: all, except one; that is, all but one, which you must except.]

1. Exclusively of; without inclusion of.

Richard except, those whom we fight against,
Had rather have us win than him they follow. Shakspeare.

God and his Son except,
Nought valued he nor fear'd. Milton.

3. Unless; if it be not so that.

It is necessary to know our duty, because 'tis necessary for us to do it; and it is impossible to do it, except we know it. Tillotson.

EXCE'PTING, ĕk-sĕp'tĭng. prep. [from except. See EXCEPT.] Without inclusion of; with exception of. An improper word.

May I not live without controul and awe,
Excepting still the letter of the law? Dryden.

People come into the world in Turkey the same way they do here, and yet, excepting the royal family, they get but little by it. Collier.

EXCE'PTION, ĕk-sĕp'shŭn. n. s. [from except; exceptio, Latin.]

1. Exclusion from the things comprehended in a precept, or position; exclusion of any person from a general law.

When God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creature to Noah and his family, we find no exception at all; but that Cham stood as fully invested with this right as any of his brethren. South.

Let the money be raised on land, with an exception to some of the more barren parts, that might be tax-free. Addison.

2. It should have from before the rule or law to which the exception refers; but it is sometimes inaccurately used with to.

Pleads, in exception to all gen'ral rules,
Your taste of follies, with our scorn of fools. Pope.

3. Thing excepted, or specified in exception.

Every act of parliament was not previous to what it enacted, unless those two, by which the earl of Strafford, and sir John Fenwick lost their heads, may pass for exceptions. Swift.

Who first taught souls enslav'd, and realms undone,
Th' enormous faith of many made for one;
That proud exception to all nature's laws,
T' invert the world and counterwork its cause. Pope.

4. Objection; cavil: with against or to.

Your assertion hath drawn us to make search whether these be just exceptions against the customs of our church, when ye plead that they are the same which the church of Rome hath, or that they are not the same which some other reformed churches have devised. Hooker.

He may have exceptions peremptory against the jurors, of which he then shall shew cause. Spenser.

Revelations will soon be discerned to be extremely conducible to reforming men's lives, such as will answer all objections and exceptions of flesh and blood against it. Hammond.

I will answer what exceptions they can have against our account, and confute all the reasons and explications they can give of their own. Bentley.

5. Peevish dislike; offence taken: sometimes with to.

I fear'd to shew my father Julia's letter,
Lest he should take exceptions to my love. Shaksp.

6. Sometimes with at.

He first took exception at this badge,
Pronouncing that the paleness of this flow'r
Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart.
Shakspeare.

7. Sometimes with against.

Roderigo, thou hast taken against me an exception; but I protest I have dealt most directly in thy affair. Shakspeare.

8. In this sense it is commonly used with the verb take.

He gave sir James Tirrel great thanks; but took exception to the place of their burial, being too base for them that were king's children. Bacon.

EXCE'PTIONABLE, ĕk-sĕp'shŭn-â-bl. adj. [from exception.] Liable to objection.

The only piece of pleasantry in Milton is where the evil spirits rally the angels upon the success of their artillery: this passage I look upon to be the most exceptionable in the whole poem. Addison.

EXCE'PTIOUS, ĕk-sĕp'shŭs. adj. [from except.] Peevish; froward; full of objections; quarrelsome.

They are so supercilious, sharp, troublesome, fierce, and exceptious, that they are not only short of the true character of friendship, but become the very sores of society. South.

EXCE'PTIVE, ĕk-sĕp'tĭv. adj. [from except.] Including an exception.

Exceptive propositions will make complex syllogisms, as none but physicians came to the consultation: the nurse is no physician, therefore the nurse came not to the consultation. Watts.

EXCE'PTLESS, ĕk-sĕpt'lĕs. adj. [from except.] Omitting or neglecting all exception; general; universal. Not in use.

Forgive my gen'ral and exceptless rashness,
Perpetual sober gods! I do proclaim
One honest man. Shakspeare's Timon.

EXCE'PTOR, ĕk-sĕp'tŭr.[166] n. s. [from except.] Objector; one that makes exceptions.

Times have consumed his works, saving some few excerptions. Raleigh.

EXCE'SS, ĕk-sĕs'. n. s. [excessus, Lat.]

1. More than enough; faulty superfluity.

Amongst the heaps of these excesses and superfluities, there is espied the want of a principal part of duty. Hooker.

Goodness answers to the theological virtue charity, and admits no excess but error: the desire of power in excess caused the angels to fall; the desire of knowledge in excess, caused man to fall; but in charity there is no excess, neither can angel or man come in danger by it. Bacon.

Members are crooked or distorted, or disproportionate to the rest; either in excess or defect. Ray.

2. Exuberance; state of exceeding; comparative exuberance.

Let the superfluous and lust dieted man,
That braves your ordinance, feel your power quickly;
So distribution shall undo excess,
And each man have enough. Shakspeare.

The several rays in that white light retain their colorifick qualities, by which those of any sort, whenever they become more copious than the rest, do by their excess and predominance cause their proper colour to appear. Newton's Opticks.

3. Intemperance; unreasonable indulgence in meat and drink.

It was excess of wine that set him on,
And on his more advice we pardon him. Shaksp.

There will be need of temperance in diet; for the body, once heavy with excess and surfeits, hangs plummets on the nobler parts. Duppa.

4. Violence of passion.
5. Transgression of due limits.

A popular sway, by forcing kings to give
More than was fit for subjects to receive,
Ran to the same extremes; and one excess
Made both, by striving to be greater, less. Denham.

Hospitality sometimes degenerates into profuseness: even parsimony itself, which sits but ill upon a publick figure, is yet the more pardonable excess of the two. Atterbury.

EXCE'SSIVE, ĕk-sĕs'sĭv. adj. [excessif, French; from excess.]

1. Beyond the common proportion of quantity or bulk.

If panicum be laid below and about the bottom of a root, it will cause the root to grow to an excessive bigness. Bacon.

2. Vehement beyond measure in kindness or dislike.

Hayward on Edward VI.

5. The thing given in return for something received.

If none appear to prove upon thy person
Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,
There is my pledge; I'll prove it on thy heart.
—There's my exchange; what in the world he is
That names me traitor, villain-like he lies. Shaksp.

Spend all I have, only give me so much time in exchange of it. Shakspeare.

It made not the silver coined go for more than its value in all things to be bought; but just so much as the denomination was raised, just so much less of commodity had the buyer in exchange for it.
Locke.

If blood you seek, I will my own resign:
O spare her life, and in exchange take mine. Dryd.

6. The thing received in return for something given.

The respect and love which was paid you by all who had the happiness to know you, was a wise exchange for the honours of the court. Dryden.

7. The place where the merchants meet to negotiate their affairs; place of sale.

He that uses the same words sometimes in one, and sometimes in another signification, ought to pass, in the schools, for as fair a man, as he does in the market and exchange, who sells several things under the same name. Locke.

No thing, no place is strange,
While his fair bosom is the world's exchange.
Denham.

EXCHA'NGER, ĕks-tshân'jŭr. n. s. [from exchange.] One who practises exchange.

Whilst bullion may be had for a small price more than the weight of our current cash, these exchangers generally chuse rather to buy bullion than run the risk of melting down our coin, which is criminal by the law. Locke.

EXCHE'AT, ĕks-tshēte'. n. s. See ESCHEAT.

He by my ruins thinks to make them great:
To make one great by others loss, is bad excheat.

Fitzosborn was executed under him, or discarded into foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement. Spenser.

Sir William Bremingham was executed for treason. Davies.

O Tyburn, could'st thou reason and dispute,
Could'st thou but judge as well as execute,
How often wou'dst thou change the felon's doom,
And truss some stern chief justice in his room! Dryden.

4. To put to death; to kill.

The treacherous Fastolfe wounds my peace,
Whom with my bare fists I would execute,
If I now had him. Shakspeare.

To E'XECUTE, êk'sê-kûte. v. n. To perform the proper office.

The cannon against St. Stephen's gate executed so well, that the portcullis and gate were broken, and entry opened into the city. Sir J. Hayward.

E'XECUTER, êk'sê-kû-tûr. n. s. [from execute.]

1. He that performs or executes any thing.

My sweet mistress
Weeps when she sees me work, and says such baseness.
Had ne'er like executer. Shakspeare.

Sophocles and Euripides, in their most beautiful pieces, are impartial executers of poetick justice. Dennis.

2. He that is intrusted to perform the will of a testator. In this sense the accent is on the second syllable.

Let's chuse executers, and talk of wills;
And yet not so; for what can we bequeath! Shakspeare.

3. An executioner; one who puts others to death. Disused.

The sad ey'd justice with his surly hum,
Delivers o'er to executers pale
The lazy yawning drone. Shakspeare.

EXE'CUTERSHIP, êgz-êk'û-tûr-ship. n. s. [from executer.] The office of him that is appointed to perform the will of the defunct.

For fishing for testaments and executerships it is worse, by how much men submit themselves to mean persons, than in service. Bacon.

EXECU'TION, ĕk-sĕ-kū'shŭn. n. s. [from execute.]

1. Performance; practice.

When things are come to the execution, there is no secrecy comparable to celerity. Bacon.

1. The act of exhaling or sending out in vapours; emission.
2. The state of evaporating or flying out in vapours; evaporation.
3. That which rises in vapours, and sometimes takes the form of meteors.

No nat'ral exhalation in the sky,
No 'scape of nature, no distemper'd day,
But they would pluck away its nat'ral cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs. Shaks.

Moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous a lustre, he must needs, as the sun, raise many envious exhalations; which, condensed by a popular odium, are capable to cast a cloud upon the brightest merit and integrity. King Charles.

A fabrick huge
Rose like an exhalation with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet. Milton.

It is no wonder if the earth be often shaken, there being quantities of exhalations within those mines, or cavernous passages, that are capable of rarefaction and inflammation. Burnet.

The growing tow'rs like exhalations rise,
And the huge columns heave into the skies. Pope.

To EXHA'LE, ĕgz-hāle'.[478] v. a. [exhalo, Lat.]

1. To send or draw out in vapours or fumes.

Yon light is not daylight, I know it well:
It is some meteor that the sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer. Shaksp.

I flattered myself with the hopes that the vapour had been exhaled. Temple.

Fear freezes minds; but love, like heat,
Exhales the soul sublime to seek her native seat. Dryden.

2. To draw out.

See, dead Henry's wounds,
Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh!
Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity!
For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood
From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells! Shakspeare.

EXHA'LEMENT, ĕgz-hāle'mĕnt. n. s. [from exhale.] Matter exhaled; vapour.

Nor will polished amber, though it send forth a gross and corporal exhalement, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scales. Brown.

To EXHA'UST, ĕgz-hâwst'.[425] v. a.

1. To drain; to diminish; to deprive by draining.

Single men be many times more charitable, because their means are less exhausted. Bacon.

Spermatick matter of a vicious sort abounds in the blood, exhausts it of its best spirits, and derives the flower of it to the seminal vessels. Wiseman.

2. To draw out totally; to draw until nothing is left.

Though the knowledge they have left us be worth our study, yet they exhausted not all its treasures; they left a great deal for the industry and sagacity of after ages. Locke.

The nursling grove
Seems fair awhile, cherish'd with foster earth;
But when the alien compost is exhaust,
Its native poverty again prevails. Philips.

EXHA'USTION, ĕgz-hâws'tshŭn.[464] n. s. [from exhaust.] The act of drawing or draining.

EXHA'USTLESS, ĕgz-hâwst'lĕs. adj. [from exhaust.] Not to be emptied; not to be all drawn off; inexhaustible.

Of heat and light, what everduring stores
Brought from the sun's exhaustless golden shores,
Through gulphs immense of intervening air,
Enrich the earth, and every loss repair. Blackmore.

One of an unfortunate constitution is perpetually exhibiting a miserable example of the weakness of mind and body. Pope.

EXHI'BITER, ĕgz-hĭb'ĭt-ŭr. n. s. [from exhibit.] He that offers any thing, as a petition or charge, in a publick manner.

He seems indifferent,
Or rather swaying more upon our part,
Than cherishing th' exhibiters against us. Shaksp.

EXHIBI'TION, ĕks-hĕ-bĭsh'ŭn. n. s. [from exhibit.]

1. The act of exhibiting; display; setting forth.

What are all mechanick works, but the sensible exhibition of mathematick demonstrations? Grew.

2. Allowance; salary; pension: it is much used for pensions allowed to scholars at the university.

I crave fit disposition for my wife,
Due preference of place and exhibition,
As levels with her breeding. Shaksp.

What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me. Shaksp.

All was assigned to the army and garrisons there, and she received only a pension or exhibition out of his coffers. Bacon.

He is now neglected, and driven to live in exile upon a small exhibition. Swift.

3. Payment; recompense.

I would not do such a thing for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition. Shaksp.

EXHI'BITIVE, ĕgz-hĭb'bĕ-tĭv. adj. [from exhibit.] Representative; displaying.

Truths must have an external existence in some understanding; or rather, they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously exhibitive or representative, according to the various modes of inimitability or participation. Norris.

To EXHI'LARATE, ĕgz-hĭl'ă-rāte. v. a. [exhilaro, Lat.] To make cheerful; to cheer; to fill with mirth; to enliven; to glad; to gladden.

The coming into a fair garden, the coming into a fair room richly furnished, a beautiful person, and the like, do delight and exhilarate the spirits much. Bacon.

The force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapours bland
About their spirits had play'd, and inmost pow'rs
Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton.

Let them thank
Boon nature, that thus annually supplies
Their vaults, and with her former liquid gifts
Exhilarates their languid minds within
The golden mean confin'd. Philips.

EXHILARA'TION, ĕgz-hĭl-ă-rā'shŭn. n. s. [from exhilarate.]

1. The act of giving gayety.
2. The state of being enlivened.

Exhilaration hath some affinity with joy, though it be a much lighter motion. Bacon.

To EXHO'RT, ĕgz-hôrt'. v. a. [exhortor, Lat.] To incite by words to any good action.

We beseech you and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us, how you ought to walk, so you would abound. Thessalonians.

My duty is to exhort you to consider the dignity of that holy mystery. Common Prayer.

Designing or exhorting glorious war. Milton.

EXHORTA'TION, ĕks-hôr-tā'shŭn. n. s. [from exhort.]

1. The act of exhorting; incitement to good.

If we will not encourage publick beneficence, 'till we are secure that no storm shall overturn what we help to build; there is no room for exhortations to charity. Atterbury.

2. The form of words by which one is exhorted.

I'll end my exhortation after dinner. Shaksp.

EXHO'RTATORY, ĕgz-hôr'tă-tŭr-ĕ.[512] adj. [from exhort.] Tending to exhort.

EXHO'RTER, ĕgz-hôr'tŭr. n. s. [from exhort.] One who exhorts or encourages by words.

To EXI'CCATE, ĕk-sĭk'kāte. v. a. [exsicco, Lat.] To dry; to dry up. Dict.

EXICCA'TION, ĕk-sĭk-kā'shŭn. n. s. [from exiccate.] Arefaction; act of drying up; state of being dried up.

What is more easily refuted than that old vulgar assertion of an universal drought and exiccation of the earth? As if the sun could evaporate the least drop of its moisture, so that it should never descend again, but be attracted and elevated quite out of the atmosphere. Bentley.

EXI'CCATIVE, ĕk-sĭk'kă-tĭv.[512] adj. [from exiccate.] Drying in quality; having the power of drying.

E'XIGENCE, ĕk'sĕ-jĕnse. } n. s. [This
E'XIGENCY, ĕk'sĕ-jĕn-sĕ. } word is probably only a corruption of exigents, vitiated by an unskilful pronunciation.]

1. Demand; want; need.

As men we are at our own choice, both for time and place and form, according to the exigence of our own occasions in private. Hooker.

You have heard what the present condition and exigencies of these several charities are. Atterbury.

While our fortunes exceed not the measure of real convenience, and are adapted to the exigencies of our station, we perceive the hand of providence in our gradual and successive supplies. Rogers.

2. Pressing necessity; distress; sudden occasion.

This dissimulation in war may be called stratagem and conduct; in other exigencies address and dexterity. Broome.

Now in such exigencies not to need,
Upon my word you must be rich indeed;
A noble superfluity it craves,
Not for yourself, but for your fools and knaves. Pope.

E'XIGENT, ĕk'sĕ-jĕnt. n. s. [exigens, Latin.]

1. Pressing business; occasion that requires immediate help.

In such an exigent I see not how they could have staid to deliberate about any other regiment than that which already was devised to their hands. Hooker.

The council met, your guards to find you sent,
And know your pleasure in this exigent. Waller.

2. [A law term.] A writ sued when the defendant is not to be found, being part of the process leading to an outlawry. Shakspeare uses it for extremity. Hanmer.

3. End.

These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,
Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent. Shaksp.

EXIGU'ITY, êks-ê-gû'ê-tê. n. s. [exiguitas, Latin.] Smallness; diminutiveness; slenderness.

The exiguity and shape of the extant particles is now supposed. Boyle.

EXI'GUOUS, êgz-îg'û-ûs. adj. [exiguus, Latin.] Small; diminutive; little. Not used.

The subtile parts and exiguous dose are consumed and evaporated in less than two hours time. Harvey.

E'XILE, êks'île. n. s. [exilium, Latin. It seems anciently to have had the accent indifferently on either syllable: now it is uniformly on the first.]

1. Banishment; state of being banished from one's country.

Our state of bodies would bewray what life
We 've led since thy exile. Shaksp.
Welcome is exile, welcome were my death. Shaksp.
Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger,
But with a grain of day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shaksp.

2. The person banished.

O must the wretched exiles ever mourn,
Nor after length of rowling years return? Dryd.
Ulysses, sole of all the victor train,
An exile from his dear paternal coast,
Deplor'd his absent queen, and empire lost. Pope.

EXI'LE, êg-zîle'. adj. [exilis, Lat.] Small; slender; not full; not powerful. Not in use, except in philosophical writings.

It were good to enquire what means may be to draw forth the exile heat which is in the air; for that may be a secret of great power to produce cold weather. Bacon.
In a virginal, when the lid is down, it maketh a more exile sound than when the lid is open. Bacon.

To E'XILE, êg-zîle'.[493] v. a. [from the noun. This had formerly the accent on the last syllable, now generally on the first, though Dryden has used both.] To banish; to drive from a country; to transport.

Call home our exil'd friends abroad,
That fled the snares of watchful tyranny. Shaksp.
Foul subordination is predominant,
And equity exil'd your highness' land. Shaksp.
For that offence,
Immediately we do exile him hence. Shaksp.
They, fettered with the bonds of a long night,
lay there exiled from the eternal providence Wisdom.
His brutal manners from his breast exil'd,
His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fil'd. Dryden.
Arms and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,
And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,
Expell'd and exil'd. Dryden.

EXI'LEMENT, êg-zîle'mênt. n. s. [from exile.] Banishment.

Fitzosborn was discarded into foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement. Wotton.

EXILI'TION, êks-ê-lish'ûn. n. s. [exilitio, Lat.] The act of springing or rushing out suddenly.

From saltpetre proceedeth the force and report of gunpowder: for sulphur and small-coal mixt will not take fire with noise or exilition; and powder which is made of impure and greasy petre, hath but a weak emission and gives but a faint report. Brown.

EXI'LITY, êg-zîl'ê-tê. n. s. [exilis, Latin.] Slenderness; smallness; diminution.

Certain flies called ephemera, live but a day; the cause is the exility of the spirit, or perhaps the absence of the sun. Bacon.
For exility of the voice, or other sounds, it is certain that the voice doth pass through solid and hard bodies, if they be not too thick; and through water, which is likewise a very close body, and such an one as letteth not in air. Bacon.
A body, by being subtilized, can lose nothing of its corporeity; neither can it hereby gain any thing but exility; for all degrees of subtility are essentially the same thing. Grew.

EXI'MIOUS, êg-zîm'ê-ûs. adj. [eximius, Lat.] Famous; eminent; conspicuous; excellent. Dict.

EXINANI'TION, êks-în-â-nîsh'ûn. n. s. [exinanitio, Lat.] Privation; loss.

He is not more impotent in his glory than he was in his exinanition. Decay of Piety.

To EXI'ST, êg-zist'.[478] v. n. [existo, Lat.] To be; to have a being.

It is as easy to conceive that an Almighty Power might produce a thing out of nothing, and make that to exist de novo, which did not exist before; as to conceive the world to have had no beginning, but to have existed from eternity. South.
It seems reasonable to enquire, how such a multitude comes to make but one idea, since that combination does not always exist together in nature. Locke.

One year is past, a different scene!
No farther mention of the dean:
Who now, alas, no more is mist
Than if he never did exist. Swift.

EXI'STENCE, êg-zis'tênse. } n. s. [exist-
EXI'STENCY. êg-zis'tên-sê. } entia, low Lat.] State of being; actual possession of being.

Nor is only the existency of this animal considerable, but many things delivered thereof. Brown.
It is impossible any being can be eternal with successive eternal physical changes, or variety of states or manner of existency, naturally and necessarily concomitant unto it. Hale.
The soul secur'd in her existence, smiles
At the drawn dagger, and defies its point. Addison.
When a being is considered as possible, it is said to have an essence or nature: such were all things before the creation. When it is considered as actual, then it is said to have existence also. Watts.

EXI'STENT, êg-zis'tênt. adj. [from exist.] Having being; in possession of being or of existence.

Whatsoever sign the sun possessed, whose recess or vicinity defineth the quarters of the year, those seasons were actually existent. Brown.
The eyes and minds are fastened on objects which have no real being, as if they were truly existent.

EXISTIMA'TION, êg-zîs-tê-mâ'shûn. n. s. [existimatio, Lat.]

1. Opinion.
2. Esteem.

E'XIT, êks'ît. n. s. [exit, Lat.]

1. The term set in the margin of plays to mark the time at which the player goes off the stage.
2. Recess; departure; act of quitting the stage; act of quitting the theatre of life.

All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women meerly players:
They have their exits and their entrances,
And one man in his time plays many parts. Shaksp.
A regard for fame becomes a man more towards the exit than at his entrance into life. Swift.
Many of your old comrades live a short life, and make a figure at their exit. Swift.

3. Passage out of any place.

In such a pervious substance as the brain, they might find an easy either entrance or exit, almost every where. Glanville.

4. Way by which there is a passage out.

The fire makes its way, forcing the water forth through its ordinary exits, wells, and the outlets of rivers. Woodward.

EXI'TIAL, êgz-îsh'yâl.[113] } adj. [exitialis,
EXI'TIOUS, êgz-îsh'yûs. } Lat.] Destructive; fatal; mortal; deleterious. Not in use.

Most exitial fevers, although not concomitated with the tokens, exanthemata, anthraces, or carbuncles, are to be censured pestilential. Harvey.

E'XODUS, êks'ô-dûs. } n. s. [ἔξοδος.] De-
E'XODY, êks'ô-dê. } parture; journey from a place: the second book of Moses is so called, because it describes the journey of the Israelites from Egypt.

In all probability their years continued to be three hundred and sixty-five days, ever since the time of the Jewish exody at least. Hale.

EXOLE'TE, êks'ô-lête. adj. [exoletus, Lat.] Obsolete; out of use. Dict.

To EXO'LVE, êgz-ôlv'. v. a. [exolvo, Lat.] To loose; to pay. Dict.

EXOLU'TION, êgz-ô-lû'shûn. n. s. [exolutio, Lat.] Laxation of the nerves.

Considering the exolution and languor ensuing that action in some, we cannot but think it much abridgeth our days. Brown.

EXO'MPHALOS, êgz-ôm'fâ-lôs. n. s. [ἐξ and ὀμφαλός.] A navel rupture.

To EXO'NERATE. êgz-ôn'êr-âte. v. a. [exonero, Lat.] To unload, to disburden; to free from any heavy charge.

The glands being a congeries of vessels curled, circumgyrated, and complicated, give the blood time to separate through the capillary vessels into the secretory ones, which afterwards all exonerate themselves into one common ductus. Ray.

EXONERA'TION, êgz-ôn-êr-â'shûn. n. s. [from exonerate.] The act of disburdening, or discharging.

The body is adapted unto eating, drinking, nutrition, and other ways of repletion and exoneration. Grew.

EXO'PTABLE, êgz-ôp'tâ-bl. adj. [exoptabilis, Lat.] Desirable; to be sought with eagerness or desire.

E'XORABLE, êks'ô-râ-bl.[405] adj. [exorabilis, Lat.] To be moved by entreaty.

EXO'RBITANCY, êgz-ôr'bê-tân-sê. } n. s. [from exorbitant.]

1. The act of going out of the track prescribed.
2. Enormity; gross deviation from rule or right.

I see some of this fault cleave to those, who have eminently corrected all other exorbitancies of the tongue. Government of the Tongue.
The reverence of my presence may be a curb to your exorbitancies. Dryden.
The people were grossly imposed on, to commit such exorbitancies as could not end but in a dissolution of the government. Swift.

3. Boundless depravity.

They riot still,
Unbounded in exorbitance of ill. Garth.

EXO'RBITANT. êgz-ôr'bê-tânt. adj. [ex and orbito, Lat.]

1. Going out of the prescribed track.

2. Deviating from the course appointed or rule established.

What signifies the fiction of the tortoise riding upon the wings of the wind, but to prescribe bounds and measures to our exorbitant passions. L'Estrange.

These phenomena are not peculiar to earthquakes in our times, but have been observed in all ages, and particularly those exorbitant commotions of the waters of the globe. Woodward.

3. Anomalous; not comprehended in a settled rule or method.

The Jews who had laws so particularly determining in all affairs what to do, were notwithstanding continually inured with causes exorbitant, and such as their laws had not provided for. Hooker.

4. Enormous; beyond due proportion; excessive.

Their subjects would live in great plenty, were not the impositions so very exorbitant; for the courts are too splendid for the territories. Addison.

So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less. Swift.

To EXO'RBITATE, êgz-ôr'bê-tâte. v. n. [ex and orbito, Lat.] To deviate; to go out of the track or road prescribed.

The planets sometimes would have approached the sun as near as the orb of Mercury, and sometimes have exorbitated beyond the distance of Saturn. Bentley.

To EXORCISE, êks'ôr-size. v. a. [ἐξορκίζω.]

1. To adjure by some holy name.
2. To drive away spirits by certain forms of adjuration.
3. To purify from the influence of malignant spirits by religious ceremonies.

And fry'rs, that through the wealthy regions run,
Resort to farmers rich, and bless their halls,
And exorcise the beds, and cross the walls. Dryd.

E'XORCISER, êks'ôr-si-zûr. n. s. [from exorcise.] One who practises to drive away evil spirits.

E'XORCISM, êks'ôr-sizm. n. s. [ἐξορκισμος.] The form of adjuration, or religious ceremony by which evil and malignant spirits are driven away.

Will his lordship behold and hear our exorcisms? Shaksp.

Symptoms supernatural, must be only curable by supernatural means; namely, by devout prayers or exorcisms. Harvey.

E'XORCIST, êks'ôr-sist. n. s. [ἐξορκιστης.]

1. One who by adjurations, prayers, or religious acts, drives away malignant spirits.

Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits. Acts.

2. An enchanter; a conjuror. Improperly.

Soul of Rome!
Thou, like an exorcist, hast conjured up
My mortified spirit. Shaksp.

Is there no exorcist
Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?
Is 't real that I see! Shaksp.

EXO'RDIUM, êgz-ôr'dê-ûm. n. s. [Lat.] A formal preface; the proemial part of a composition.

Nor will I thee detain
With poets' fictions, nor oppress thine ear
With circumstance, and long exordiums here.
May's Virgil.

I have been distasted at this way of writing, by reason of long prefaces and exordiums. Addison.

EXORNA'TION, êks-ôr-nâ'shûn. n. s. [exornatio, Lat.] Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

It seemeth that all those curious exornations should rather cease. Hooker.

Hyperbolical exornations and elegancies many much affect. Hale.

EXO'SSATED, êgz-ôs'sâ-têd. adj. [exossatus, Lat.] Deprived of bones. Dict.

EXOSTO'SIS, êks-ôs-tô'sis.[520] n. s. [ἐξ and ὀστεον.] Any protuberance of a bone that is not natural, as often happens in venereal cases. Quincy.

EXO'SSEOUS, êgz-ôsh'shê-ûs. adj. [ex and ossa, Lat.] Wanting bones; boneless; formed without bones.

Thus we daily observe in the heads of fishes, as also in snails and soft exosseous animals, nature near the head hath placed a flat white stone, or testaceous concretion. Brown.

EXO'TICK, êgz-ôt'ik. adj. [ἐξωτικος.] Foreign; not produced in our own country; not domestick.

Some learned men treat of the nature of letters as of some remote exotick thing, whereof we had no knowledge but by fabulous relations. Holder.

Continue fresh hot-beds to entertain such exotick plants as arrive not to their perfection without them. Evelyn.

EXO'TICK, êgz-ôt'ik. n. s. A foreign plant.

Claudian was seated on the other summit, which was barren, and produced, on some spots, plants that are unknown to Italy, and such as the gardeners call exoticks. Addison.

To EXPA'ND, êk-spând. v. a. [expando, Lat.]

1. To spread; to lay open as a net or sheet.
2. To dilate; to spread out every way; to diffuse.

She useth most the target to fence away the blow, and leaves all other weapons to the Alchoran to propagate and expand itself. Howel.

Bellerophon's horse framed of iron, and placed between two loadstones, with wings expanded, hung pendulous in the air. Brown.

An animal growing, expands its fibres in the air as a fluid. Arbuthnot.

Along the stream of time thy name
Expanded flies and gathers all its fame. Pope.

EXPA'NSE, êk-spânse'. n. s. [expansum, Lat.] A body widely extended without inequalities.

A murmuring sound
Of waters issue from a cave, and spread
Into a liquid plain; then stood unmov'd,
Pure as the expanse of heav'n. Milton.

Bright as th' ethereal glows the green expanse. Savage.

On the smooth expanse of crystal lakes,
The sinking stone at first a circle makes;
The trembling surface, by the motion stirr'd,
Spreads in a second circle, then a third;
Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance,
Fill all the wat'ry plain, and to the margin dance. Pope.

EXPANSIBI'LITY, êk-spân-sê-bîl'ê-tê. n. s. [from expansible.] Capacity of extension; possibility to be expanded or spread into a wider surface.

With the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, by which the atoms in one fluid are distinguished from those of another; else all fluids would be alike in weight, expansibility, and all other qualities. Grew.

EXPA'NSIBLE, êk-spân'sê-bl. adj. [from expansus, Lat.] Capable to be extended; capable to be spread into a wider surface.

Bodies are not expansible in proportion to their weight, or to the quantity of matter to be expanded. Grew.

EXPA'NSION, êks-pân'shûn. n. s. [from expand.]

1. The state of being expanded into a wider surface or greater space.

'Tis demonstrated that the condensation and expansion of any portion of the air is always proportional to the weight and pressure incumbent upon it. Bentley.

2. The act of spreading out.

The easy expansion of the wing of a bird, and the lightness, strength, and shape of the feathers, are all fitted for her better flight. Grew.

3. Extent; space to which any thing is extended.

The capacious mind of man cannot be confined by the limits of the world: it extends its thoughts often even beyond the utmost expansion of matter, and makes excursions into that incomprehensible inane. Locke.

4 Pure space, as distinct from extension in solid matter.

Distance or space, in its simple abstract conception, I call expansion, to distinguish it from extension, which expresses this distance only as it is in the solid parts of matter. Locke.

It would for ever take an useless flight,
Lost in expansion, void and infinite. Blackmore.

EXPA'NSIVE, êks-pân'sîv.[428] adj. [from expand.] Having the power to spread into a wider surface, or greater space.

The elastick or expansive faculty of the air, whereby it dilates itself when compressed, hath been made use of in the common weather glasses. Ray.

Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold. Thomson.

To EXPA'TIATE, êk-spâ'shê-âte.[542] v. n. [expatior, Lat.]

1. To range at large; to rove without any prescribed limits.

Religion contracts the circle of our pleasures, but leaves it wide enough for her votaries to expatiate in. Addison.

He looks in heav'n with more than mortal eyes,
Bids his free soul expatiate in the skies;
Amidst her kindred stars familiar roam,
Survey the region, and confess her home. Pope.

Expatiate free o'er all the scene of man;
Almighty maze! but not without a plan. Pope.

With wonder seiz'd, we view the pleasing ground,
And walk delighted, and expatiate round. Pope.

2. To enlarge upon in language.

They had a custom of offering the tongues to Mercury, because they believed him the giver of eloquence: Dacier expatiates upon this custom. Broome.

3. To let loose; to allow to range. This sense, which is active, is very improper.

Make choice of a subject, which, being of itself capable of all that colours and the elegance of design can possibly give, shall afterwards afford art an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate itself. Dryden.

To EXPE'CT, êk-spêkt'. v. a. [expecto, Lat.]

1. To have a previous apprehension of either good or evil.

We expected
Immediate dissolution. Milton.

Needs must the serpent now his capital bruise
Expect with mortal pain. Milton.

Good with bad
Expect to hear, supernal grace contending
With sinfulness of man. Milton.

Eve, now expect great tidings. Milton.

2. To wait for; to attend the coming.

The guards,
By me encamp'd on yonder hill, expect
Their motion. Milton.

While, expecting there the queen, he rais'd
His wond'ring eyes, and round the temple gaz'd.
Dryden.

To EXPE'CT, ĕk-spĕkt'. v. n. To wait; to stay.

Elihu had expected till Job had spoken. Job.

EXPE'CTABLE, ĕk-spĕk'tâ-bl. adj. [from expect.] To be expected; to be hoped or feared.

Occult and spiritual operations are not expectable from ice; for being but water congealed, it can never make good such qualities. Brown.

EXPE'CTANCE, ĕk-spĕk'tânse. } n. s. [from EXPE'CTANCY, ĕk-spĕk'tân-sĕ. } expect.]

1. The act or state of expecting; expectation.

Every moment is expectancy
Of more arrivance. Shaksp.

Satyrs leave your petulance,
Or else rail upon the moon,
Your expectance is too soon;
For before the second cock
Crow, the gates will not unlock. Ben Jonson.

This blessed expectance must be now my theme. Boyle.

But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou dost stay!
Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.

2. Something expected.

There is expectance here from both the sides,
What further you will do. Shaksp.

3. Hope; that of which the expectation is accompanied with pleasure.

Oh, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown!
The expectancy and rose of the fair state. Shaksp.

EXPE'CTANT, ĕk-spĕk'tânt. adj. [Fr.] Waiting in expectation.

Her majesty has offered concessions in order to remove scruples raised in the mind of the expectant heir. Swift.

EXPE'CTANT, ĕk-spĕk'tânt. n. s. [from expect.] One who waits in expectation of any thing; one held in dependence by his hopes.

They, vain expectants of the bridal hour,
My stores in riotous expence devour. Pope.

This treatise was agreeable to the whole nation, except those who had employments, or were expectants. Swift.

EXPECTA'TION, ĕk-spĕk-tâ'shŭn. n. s. [expectatio, Lat.]

1. The act of expecting.

The trees
Should have borne men, and expectation fainted
Longing for what it had not. Shaksp.

The rest,
That are within the note of expectation,
Already are i' th'court. Shaksp.

'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear. Congreve.

2. The state of expecting either with hope or fear.

Live in a constant and serious expectation of that day, when we must appear before the Judge of heaven and earth. Rogers.

3. Prospect of any thing good to come.

My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him. Psalms.

4. The object of happy expectation; the Messiah expected.

Now clear I understand,
What oft my steadiest thoughts have search'd in vain,
Why our great expectation should be call'd
The seed of woman. Milton.

5. A state in which something excellent is expected from us.

How fit it will be for you, born so great a prince, and of so rare not only expectation but proof, to divert your thoughts from the way of goodness. Sidney.

You first came home
From travel with such hopes as made you look'd on,
By all men's eyes, a youth of expectation;
Pleas'd with your growing virtue I receiv'd you. Otway.

EXPE'CTER, ĕk-spĕk'tŭr. n. s. [from expect.]

1. One who has hopes of something.

These are not great expecters under your administration, according to the period of governors here. Swift.

2. One who waits for another.

Signify this loving interview
To the expecters of our Trojan part. Shaksp.

By sin and death a broad way now is pav'd,
To expedite your glorious march. Milton.

2. To hasten; to quicken.

An inquisition would still be a further improvement, and would expedite the conversion of the papists. Swift.

3. To dispatch; to issue from a publick office.

Though such charters be expedited of course, and as of right, yet they are varied by discretion. Bacon.

EXPEDITE, ĕks'pē-dite. adj. [expeditus, Lat.]

1. Quick; hasty; soon performed.

Wholesome advice, and expedite execution in freeing the state of those monsters. Sandys.

2. Easy; disencumbered; clear from impediments.

Nature can teach the church but in part; neither so fully as is requisite for man's salvation, nor so easily as to make the way plain and expedite enough, that many may come to the knowledge of it, and so be saved, and therefore the Scripture has been given. Hooker.

3. Nimble; active; agile.

The more any man's soul is cleansed from sensual lusts, the more nimble and expedite it will be in its operations. Tillotson.

4. It seems to be used by Bacon for light armed in the Roman signification.

He sent the lord chamberlain with expedite forces to speed to Exeter, to the rescue of the town. Bacon.

EXPEDITELY, ĕks'pē-dite-lē. adv. [from expedite.] With quickness; readily; hastily.

Nature left his ears naked, that he may turn them more expeditely for the reception of sounds from every quarter. Grew.

EXPEDI'TION, ĕks-pē-dish'ŭn. n. s. [from expedite.]

1. Haste; speed; activity.

Prayers, whereunto devout minds have added a piercing kind of brevity, thereby the better to express that quick and speedy expedition wherewith ardent affections, the very wings of prayer, are delighted to present our suits in heaven. Hooker.

Ev'n with the speediest expedition
I will dispatch him to the emperor's court. Shaksp.

2. A march or voyage with martial intentions.

Young Octavius, and Mark Antony,
Come down upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their expedition tow'rd Philippi. Shaksp.

1. To drive out; to force away.

The Lord your God shall expel them from before you, and drive them from out of your sight. Josh.

I may know the let why gentle peace
Should not expel these inconveniences. Shaksp.

Suppose a mighty rock to fall there, it would expel the waters out of their places with such violence as to fling them among the clouds. Burnet.

2. To eject; to throw out.

Whatsoever cannot be digested by the stomach, is either put up by vomit, or put down to the guts, and other parts of the body are moved to expel by consent. Bacon.

The virgin huntress was not slow
T' expel the shaft from her contracted bow. Dryd.

3. To banish; to drive from the place of residence.

Arms and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,
And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,
Expell'd and exil'd left the Trojan shore. Dryd.

4. To reject; to refuse.

And would you not poor fellowship expel,
Myself would offer you t' accompany,
In this adventurous chanceful jeopardy. Hub. Tal.

5. To keep off; to exclude; to keep out.

Since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And threw her sun expelling mask away,
The air hath starv'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pitch'd the lily tincture of her face. Shaksp.

O, that the earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a wall to expel the winter's flaw.
Shaksp.

EXPE'LLER, êks-pêl'lûr. n. s. [from expel.] One that expels or drives away.

To EXPE'ND, êks-pênd'. v. a. [expendo, Lat.] To lay out; to spend.

If my death might make this island happy,
I would expend it with all willingness. Shaksp.

The king of England wasted the French king's country, and thereby caused him to expend such sums of money as exceeded the debt. Hayward.

The publick burdens, though they may be a good reason for our not expending so much in charity, yet will not justify us in giving nothing. Atterbury.

EXPE'NSE, êks-pênse'. n. s. [expensum, Lat.] Cost; charges; money expended.

Hence comes that wild and vast expense,
That hath enforc'd Rome's virtue thence,
Which simple poverty first made. Ben Jonson.

A feast prepar'd with riotous expense,
Much cost, more care, and most magnificence.
Dryden.

Such provision made, that a country should not want so many springs as were convenient, and afford a supply every where suitable to the necessities and expenses of each climate. Woodward.

I can see no reason by which we were obliged to make those prodigious expenses. Swift.

EXPE'NSEFUL, êks-pênse'fûl. adj. [expense and full.] Costly; chargeable; expensive.

No part of structure is either more expenseful than windows, or more ruinous. Wotton.

EXPE'NSELESS, êks-pênse'lês. adj. [from expense.] Without cost.

A physician may save any army by this frugal and expenseless means only. Milton.

What health promotes, and gives unenvy'd peace,
Is all expenseless, and procur'd with ease. Blackmore.

EXPE'NSIVE, êks-pên'sîv.[423] adj. [from expense.]

1. Given to expense; extravagant; luxurious.

Frugal and industrious men are friendly to the established government, as the idle and expensive are dangerous. Temple.

2. Costly; requiring expense: as, expensive dress, an expensive journey.
3. Liberal; generous; distributive.

This requires an active, expensive, indefatigable goodness, such as our apostle calls a work and labour of love. Sprat.

EXPE'NSIVELY, êks-pên'sîv-lê. adv. [from expensive.] With great expense; at great charge.

I never knew him live so great and expensively as he hath done since his return from exile. Swift.

Their highways, for their extent, solidity, or expensiveness, are some of the greatest monuments of the grandeur of the Roman empire. Arbuthnot.

EXPE'RIENCE, êks-pê'rê-ênse. n. s. [expérientia, Lat.]

1. Practice; frequent trial.

Hereof experience hath informed reason, and time hath made those things apparent which were hidden. Raleigh.

But apt the mind or fancy is to rove
Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end,
'Till warn'd, or by experience taught, she learn,
That not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtle, but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom; what is more, is fume
Or emptiness, or fond impertinence,
And renders us in things that most concern
Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton.

2. Knowledge gained by trial and practice.

Boys immature in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure.
Shaksp.

But if you'll prosper, mark what I advise,
Whom age and long experience render wise. Pope.

To EXPE'RIENCE, êks-pê'rê-ênse. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To try; to practise.
2. To know by practice.

He through the armed files
Darts his experienc'd eye. Milton.

EXPE'RIENCED, êks-pê'rê-ênst. participial adj. [from experience.]

1. Made skilful by experience.

We must perfect, as much as we can, our ideas of the distinct species: or learn them from such as are used to that sort of things, and are experienced in them. Locke.

2. Wise by long practice.

To him experienc'd Nestor thus rejoin'd,
O friend! what sorrows dost thou bring to mind!
Pope.

EXPE'RIENCER, êks-pê'rê-ên-sûr. n. s. One who makes trials; a practiser of experiments.

A curious experiencer did affirm, that the likeness of any object, if strongly enlightened, will appear to another, in the eye of him that looks strongly and steadily upon it, 'till he be dazzled by it; even after he shall have turned his eyes from it. Digby on Bodies.

EXPE'RIMENT, êks-pêr'ê-mênt. n. s. [experimentum, Latin.] Trial of any thing; something done in order to discover an uncertain or unknown effect.

That which sheweth them to be wise, is the gathering of principles out of their own particular experiments; and the framing of our particular experiments, according to the rule of their principles, shall make us such as they are. Hooker.

It is good also not try experiments in states, except the necessity be urgent, or the utility evident. Bacon.

Adam! by sad experiment I know,
How little weight with thee my words can find.
Milton.

'Till his fall man's mind was ignorant of nothing but of sin; or, at least, it rested in the notion without the smart of the experiment. South.

When we are searching out the nature or properties of any being by various methods of trial, this sort of observation is called experiment. Watts.

To EXPE'RIMENT, êks-pêr'ê-mênt. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To try; to search out by trial.

Francisco Redi experimented that no putrified flesh will of itself, if all insects be carefully kept from it, produce any. Ray on the Creation.

2. To know by experience.

When the succession of ideas ceases, our perception of duration ceases with it, which every one experiments whilst he sleeps soundly. Locke.

EXPERIME'NTAL, êks-pêr-ê-mên'tâl. adj. [from experiment.]

1. Pertaining to experiment.
2. Built upon experiment; formed by observation.

Trust not my reading, nor my observations,
Which with experimental seal do warrant
The tenor of my book. Shakspeare.

The experimental testimony of Gillius is most considerable of any, who beheld the course thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

3. Known by experiment or trial.

We have no other evidence of universal impenetrability, besides a large experience, without an experimental exception. Newton.

These are so far from being subservient to atheists in their audacious attempts, that they rather afford an experimental confirmation of the universal deluge. Bentley's Sermons.

EXPERIME'NTALLY, êks-pêr-ê-mên'tâl-lê. adv. [from experiment.] By experience; by trial; by experiment; by observation.

The miscarriage being sometimes universal, has made us impart what we have experimentally learned by our own observations. Evelyn.

While the man is under the scourge of affliction, he is willing to abjure those sins which he now experimentally finds attended with such bitter consequences. Rogers' Sermons.

EXPE'RIMENTER, êks-pêr'ê-mên-tûr. n. s. [from experiment.] One who makes experiment.

Galileus and Morsennus, two exact experimenters, do think they find this verity by their experiences; but surely this is impossible to be done. Digby on Bodies.

EXPE'RT, êks-pêrt'. adj. [expertus, Latin.]

1. Skilful; addressful; intelligent.

Now we will take some order in the town,
Placing therein some expert officers. Shakspeare

Again fair Alma sits confest,
On Florimel's experter breast;
When she the rising sigh constrains,
And by concealing speaks her pains. Prior.

2. Ready; dexterous.

The meanest sculptor in th' Æmilian square,
Can imitate in brass the nails and hair;
Expert in trifles, and a cunning fool,
Able t' express the parts, but not dispose the whole.
Dryden.

They have not the good luck to be perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism, or expert in mode and figure. Locke.

3. Skilful by practice or experience. This sense is rare.

Expert men can execute and judge of particulars, one by one; but the general counsels, and the plots and marshalling of affairs come best from those that are learned. Bacon.

4. It is used by Pope with of before the object of skill, generally with in.

Thy offspring bloom,
Expert of arms, and prudent in debate,
The gifts of Heaven to guard thy hoary state.
Pope's Odyssey.

EXPE'RTLY, êks-pêrt'lê. adv. [from expert.] In a skilful, ready, and dexterous manner.

EXPE'RTNESS, êks-pêrt'nês. n. s. [from expert.] Skill; readiness; dexterity.

What his reputation, what his valour, honesty, and expertness in war. Shakspeare.

This army, for the expertness and valour of the soldiers, was thought sufficient to have met the greatest army of the Turks. Knolles' History.

E'XPIABLE, êks'pê-â-bl. adj. [from expiate.] Capable to be expiated or atoned.

To E'XPIATE, êks'pê-âte. v. a. [expio, Lat.]

1. To annul the guilt of a crime by subsequent acts of piety; to atone for.

Strong and able petty felons, in true penitence, implore permission to expiate their crimes by their assiduous labours in so innocent and so hopeful a work. Bacon.

The odium which some men's rigour or remissness had contracted upon my government, I resolved to expiate by regulations. King Charles.

For the cure of this disease an humble, serious, hearty repentance is the only physick; not to expiate the guilt of it, but to qualify us to partake of the benefit of Christ's atonement. Ray.

2. To avert the threats of prodigies.

3. To make reparation for.

The treasurer obliged himself to expiate the injury, to procure some declaration to that purpose, under his majesty's sign manual. Clarendon.

The more they have hitherto embezzled their parts, the more they endeavour to expiate that unthriftiness by a more careful managery for the future. Gov. of the Tongue.

EXPIA'TION, êks-pê-â'shûn. n. s. [from expiate.]

1. The act of expiating or atoning for any crime.

2. The means by which we atone for crimes; atonement.

Law can discover sin, but not remove,
Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats. Milton.

The former part of this poem is but a due expiation for my not serving my king and country in it. Dryden.

Let a man's innocence be what it will, let his virtues rise to the highest pitch of perfection, there will be still in him so many secret sins, so many human frailties, so many offences of ignorance, passion, and prejudice, so many unguarded words and thoughts, that without the advantage of such an expiation and atonement, as christianity has revealed to us, it is impossible he should be saved. Addison.

3. Practices by which the threats of ominous prodigies were averted.

Upon the birth of such monsters, the Grecians and Romans did use divers sorts of expiations, and to go about their principal cities with many solemn ceremonies and sacrifices. Hayward.

E'XPIATORY, êks'pê-â-tûr-ê.[512] adj. [from expiate.] Having the power of expiation or atonement.

His voluntary death for others prevailed with God, and had the force of an expiatory sacrifice. Hooker.

EXPILA'TION, êks-pê-lâ'shûn. n. s. [expilatio, Latin.] Robbery; the act of committing waste upon land to the loss of the heir.

EXPIRA'TION, êks-pê-râ'shûn. n. s. [from expire.]

1. That act of respiration which thrusts the air out of the lungs, and contracts the cavity of the breast. Quincy.

In all expiration the motion is outwards, and therefore rather driveth away the voice than draweth it. Bacon.

Of an inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increases upon inspiration; by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot.

2. The last emission of breath; death.

We have heard him breathe the groan of expiration. Rambler.

3. Evaporation; act of fuming out.

4. Vapour; matter expired.

Words of this sort resemble the wind in fury and impetuousness, in transientness and sudden expiration. Decay of Piety.

Close air is warmer than open air, as the cause of cold is an expiration from the earth, which in open places is stronger. Bacon.

5. The cessation of any thing to which life is figuratively ascribed.

To satisfy ourselves of its expiration we darkened the room, and in vain endeavoured to discover any spark of fire. Boyle.

6. The conclusion of any limited time.

If 'till the expiration of your month,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me.
Shaksp.

This he did in a fortnight after the expiration of the treaty of Uxbridge. Clarendon.

To EXPI'RE, êk-spire'. v. a. [expiro, Latin.]

1. To breathe out.

To save his body from the scorching fire,
Which he from hellish entrails did expire.
Fairy Queen.

Anatomy exhibits the lungs in a continual motion of inspiring and expiring air. Harvey.

This chaf'd the boar; his nostrils flames expire,
And his red eyeballs roll with living fire. Dryden.

2. To exhale; to send out in exhalations.

The fluid which is thus secreted, and expired forth along with the air, goes off in insensible parcels. Woodward.

3. To close; to conclude; to bring to an end. Obsolete.

When as time flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that these two javels
Should render up a reck'ning of their travels.
Hubberd's Tale.

To EXPI'RE, êk-spire'. v. n.

1. To make an emission of the breath.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopt, it suddenly dies. Walton.

2. To die; to breathe the last.

For when the fair in all their pride expire,
To their first elements the souls retire. Pope.

3. To perish; to fall; to be destroyed.

All thy praise is vain,
Save what this verse, which never shall expire,
Shall to thee purchase. Spenser.

The dead man's knell,
Is there scarce ask'd, for whom; and good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or ere they sicken. Shaksp.

4. To fly out with a blast.

The distance judg'd for shot of every size,
The linstocks touch, the ponderous ball expires;
The vigorous seaman every porthole plies,
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryden.

5. To conclude; to terminate; to come to an end.

A month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond. Shak.

To EXPLA'IN, êks-plâne'. v. a. [explano, Lat.] To expound; to illustrate; to clear by notes or commentaries.

Such is the original design, however we may explain it away. Ayliffe.

You will have a variety of commentators to explain the difficult passages to you. Gay.

Some explained the meaning quite away. Pope.

EXPLA'INABLE, êks-plâne'â-bl. adj. [from explain.] Capable of being explained or interpreted.

It is symbolically explainable, and implieth purification and cleanness. Brown.

EXPLA'INER, êks-plâne'ûr. n. s. [from explain.] Expositor; interpreter; commentator.

EXPLANA'TION, êks-plâ-nâ'shûn. n. s. [from explain.]

1. The act of explaining or interpreting.

2. The sense given by an explainer or interpreter.

Although the truths may be elicited and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale.

The last verse of his last satyr is not yet sufficiently explicated. Dryden.

EXPLICA'TION, êks-plê-kâ'shûn. n. s. [from explicate.]

1. The act of opening, unfolding, or expanding.

2. The act of explaining; intrepretation; explanation.

The church preacheth, first publishing by way of testimony, the truth which from them she hath received, written in the sacred volumes of scripture; secondly, by way of explication, discovering the mysteries which lie hid therein. Hooker.

Many things are needful for explication, and many for application unto particular occasions. Hooker.

Allowances are made in the explication of our Saviour's parables, which hold only as to the main scope. Atterbury.

3. The sense given by an explainer; interpretation.

'Tis the substance of this theory I mainly depend upon; many single explications and particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts. Burnet.

E'XPLICATIVE, êks'plè-kâ-tîv.[512] adj. [from explicate.] Having a tendency to explain.

If the term which is added to the subject of a complex proposition be either essential or any way necessary to it, then it is called explicative; for it only explains the subject; as every mortal man is a son of Adam. Watts.

EXPLICA'TOR, êks-plè-kâ'tûr. n. s. [from explicate.] Expounder; interpreter; explainer.

EXPLI'CIT, êks-plîs'ît. adj. [explicitus, Lat.] Unfolded; plain; clear; not obscure; not merely implied.

We must lay aside that lazy and fallacious method of censuring by the lump, and bring things close to explicit proof and evidence. Burnet.

These speculations, when most refined, serve only to shew how impossible it is for us to have a clear and explicit notion of that which is infinite. South.

EXPLI'CITLY, êks-plîs'ît-lé. adv. [from explicit.] Plainly; directly; not merely by inference or implication.

This querulous humour carries an implicit repugnance to God's disposals; but where it is indulged, it usually is its own expositor, and explicitly avows it. Gov. of the Tongue.

To EXPLO'DE, êks-plôde'. v. a. [explodo, Lat.]

1. To drive out disgracefully with some noise of contempt; to treat with open contempt; to treat not only with neglect but open disdain or scorn.

Him old and young
Exploded, and had seiz'd with violent hands,
Had not a cloud descending snatch'd him thence,
Unseen amid the throng. Milton.

Thus was th' applause they meant,
Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to shame,
Cast on themselves from their own mouths. Milton.

Old age explodes all but morality. Roscommon.

There is pretended, that a magnetical globe or terrella, being placed upon its poles, would have a constant rotation; but this is commonly exploded, as being against all experience. Wilkins.

Shall that man pass for a proficient in Christ's school, who would have been exploded in the school of Zeno. South.

Provided that no word, which a society shall give a sanction to, be antiquated and exploded, they may receive whatever new ones they shall find occasion for. Swift.

2. To drive out with noise and violence.

But late the kindled powder did explode
The massy ball, and the brass tube unload. Blackmore.

EXPLO'DER, êks-plô'dûr. n. s. [from explode.] A hisser; one who drives out any person or thing with open contempt.

EXPLO'IT, êks-plôît'. n. s. [expletum, Latin, res expleta.] A design accomplished; an achievement; a successful attempt.

Know'st thou not any whom corrupting gold
Would tempt into a close exploit of death? Shak.

Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;
But mine it will that no exploit have done. Shak.

How shall I relate
To human sense th' invisible exploits
Of warring spirits? Milton.

He breaks fierce Hannibal's insulting heats;
Of which exploits thus our friend Ennius treats. Denham.

Will you thus dishonour
Your past exploits, and sully all your wars! Addison's Cato.

To EXPLO'IT, êks-plôît'. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to achieve. Not used.

He exploited great matters in his own person in Gallia, and by his son in Spain. Camden.

To EXPLO'RATE, êks-plô'râte. v. a. [exploro, Lat.] To search out; to try by searching; to explore.

Snails exclude their horns, and therewith explorate their way. Brown.

EXPLORA'TION, êks-plô-râ'shûn. n. s. [from explorate.] Search; examination.

For exact exploration scales should be suspended where the air is quiet, that, clear of impediments, they may the more freely convert upon their natural verticity. Brown.

Use may be made of the like way of exploration in that enquiry which puzzles so many modern naturalists. Boyle.

EXPLORA'TOR, êks-plô-râ'tûr. n. s. [from explorate.] One who searches; a searcher; an examiner.

EXPLO'RATORY, êks-plôr'â-tûr-é.[511 535] adj. [from explorate.] Searching; examining.

To EXPLO'RE, êks-plôre'. v. a. [exploro, Lat.] To try; to search into; to examine by trial.

Abdiel that sight endur'd not, where he stood
Among the mightiest, bent on highest deeds,
And thus his own undaunted heart explores. Milton.

Divers opinions I have been inclined to question not only as a naturalist, but as a chymist, whether they be agreeable to true grounds of philosophy, or the exploring experiments of the fire. Boyle.

But Capys, and the rest of sounder mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Or to the wat'ry deep; at least to bore
The hollow sides, and hidden frauds explore. Dryden.

The mighty Stagyrite first left the shore,
Spread all his sails, and durst the deeps explore;
He steer'd securely, and discover'd far,
Led by the light of the Mœonian star. Pope.

EXPLO'REMENT, êks-plôre'mênt. n. s. [from explore.] Search; trial.

The frustrated search of Porta, upon the explorement of many, could scarce find one. Brown.

EXPLO'SION, êks-plô zhûn. n. s. [from explode.] The act of driving out any thing with noise and violence.

Those parts which abound with strata or stone, or marble, making the strongest opposition, are the most furiously shattered; an event observable not only in this, but all other explosions whatever. Woodward.

In gunpowder the charcoal and sulphur easily take fire, and set fire to the nitre; and the spirit of the nitre being thereby rarefied into vapour, rushes out with explosion, after the manner that the vapour of water rushes out of an æolipile: the sulphur also being volatile, is converted into vapour, and augments the explosion. Newton.

With explosion vast
The thunder raises his tremendous voice. Thomson.

EXPLO'SIVE, êks-plô'sîv.[158 428] adj. [from explode.] Driving out with noise and violence.

These minerals constitute in the earth a kind of natural gunpowder, which takes fire; and by the assistance of its explosive power, renders the shock greater. Woodward.

EXPO'NENT, êks-pô'nênt. n. s. [from expono, Lat.]

Exponent of the ratio, or proportion between any two numbers or quantities, is the exponent arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent: thus six is the exponent of the ratio which thirty hath to five. Also a rank of numbers in arithmetical progression, beginning from 0, and placed over a rank of numbers in geometrical progression, are called indices or exponents: and in this is founded the reason and demonstration of logarithms; for addition and subtraction of these exponents answers to multiplication and division in the geometrical numbers. Harris.

EXPONE'NTIAL, êks-pô-nên'tshâl. adj. [from exponent.]

Exponential curves are such as partake both of the nature of algebraick and transcendental ones. They partake of the former, because they consist of a finite number of terms, though those terms themselves are indeterminate; and they are in some measure transcendental, because they cannot be algebraically constructed. Harris.

To EXPO'RT, êks-pôrt'. v. a. [exporto, Lat.] To carry out of a country, generally in the way of traffick.

Glorious followers taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon.

Edward III. by his encouragement of trade, turned the scale so much in favour of English merchandise, that, by a balance of trade taken in his time, the exported commodities amounted to two hundred ninety-four thousand pounds, and the imported but to thirty-eight thousand. Addison.

Great ships brought from the Indies precious wood, and exported pearls and robes. Arbuthnot.

E'XPORT, êks'pôrt.[492] n. s. [from the verb.] Commodity carried out in traffick.

EXPORTA'TION, êks-pôr-tâ'shûn. n. s. [from export.] The act or practice of carrying out commodities into other countries.

The cause of a kingdom's thriving is fruitfulness of soil to produce necessaries, not only sufficient for the inhabitants, but for exportation into other countries. Swift.

EXPO'RTER, êks-pôr'tûr. n. s. [from export.] He that carries out commodities, in opposition to the importer who brings them in.

Money will be melted down, or carried away in coin by the exporter, whether the pieces of each species be by the law bigger or less. Locke.

To EXPO'SE, êks-pôze'. v. a. [expono, expositum, Lat.; exposer, Fr.]

1. To lay open; to make liable.

Take physick, Pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And shew Heav'n just. Shakspeare.

Who here
Will envy whom the highest place exposes
Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim? Milton.

To pass the riper period of his age,
Acting his part upon a crowded stage,
To lasting toils expos'd, and endless cares,
To open dangers, and to secret snares Prior.

2. To put in the power of any thing.

But still he held his purpose to depart;
For as he lov'd her equal to his life,
He would not to the seas expose his wife. Dryden.

3. To lay open; to make bare; to put in a state of being acted upon.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature strong, renew their love;
Then fields the blades of bury'd corn disclose,
And while the balmy western spirit blows,
Earth to the breath her bosom dares expose. Dryden.

4. To lay open to censure or ridicule; to show in such a state as brings contempt.

Like Horace, you only expose the follies of men, without arraigning their vices. Dryden.

Tully has justly exposed a precept, that a man should live with his friend, in such a manner that if he became his enemy, it should not be in his power to hurt him. Addison.

A fool might once himself alone expose,
Now one in verse makes many more in prose. Pope.

Your fame and your property suffer alike, you are at once exposed and plundered. Pope.

5. To lay open to examination.

Those who seek truth only, freely expose their principles to the test, and are pleased to have them examined. Locke.

6. To put in danger.

The exposing himself notoriously did change the fortune of the day, when his troops begun to give ground. Clarendon.

7. To cast out to chance.

A father, unnaturally careless of his child, gives him to another man; and he again exposes him: a third man finding him, breeds up and provides for him as his own. Locke.

Helpless and naked on a woman's knees,
To be expos'd or rear'd as she may please,
Feel her neglect, and pine from her disease. Prior.

8. To censure; to treat with dispraise. A colloquial abuse of the word.

A little wit is equally capable of exposing a beauty, and of aggravating a fault. Addison.

EXPOSI'TION, ĕks-pŏ-zĭsh'ŭn. n. s. [from expose.]

1. The situation in which any thing is placed with respect to the sun or air.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell; drawn from springs with an easterly exposition. Arbuthnot.

The diversity of exposition of the several kitchens in this city, whereby some receive the rays of the sun sooner, and others later, will occasion great irregularity as to the time of dining. Arbuthnot.

2. Explanation; interpretation. [from expound, expono, Lat.]

My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you, to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text. Shakspeare.

You are a worthy judge;
You know the law: your exposition
Hath been most sound. Shakspeare.

I have sometimes very boldly made such expositions of my authors, as no commentator will forgive me. Dryden.

EXPO'SITOR, ĕks-pŏz'ĕ-tŭr. n. s. [expositor, Lat.] Explainer; expounder; interpreter.

A mirth-moving jest,
Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,
Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged ears play truant at his tales. Shaksp.

In the picture of Abraham's sacrificing his son, Isaac is described as a little boy, which is not consentaneous unto the authority of expositors. Brown.

The sinner's conscience is the best expositor of the mind of God, under any judgment or affliction. South.

Scholiasts, those copious expositors of places, pour out a vain overflow of learning on passages plain and easy. Locke.

To EXPO'STULATE, ĕks-pŏs'tshŭ-lāte. [465] v. n. [expostulo, Lat.] To canvass with another; to altercate; to debate without open rupture.

More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that for reverence of some alive
I give a sparing limit to my tongue. Shakspeare.

The emperor's ambassador did expostulate with the king, that he had broken his league with the emperor. Hayward.

It is madness for friendless and unarmed innocence to expostulate with invincible power. L'Estrange.

Durst I expostulate with providence, I then might ask. Cotton.

The bishop will expostulate, and the tenant will have regard to the reasonableness of the demand. Swift.

EXPOSTULA'TION, ĕks-pŏs-tshŭ-lā'shŭn. n. s. [from expostulate.]

1. Debate; altercation; discussion of an affair in private without rupture.

Expostulations end well between lovers, but ill between friends. Spectator.

2. Charge; accusation.

This makes her bleeding patients to accuse
High Heav'n, and these expostulations use;
Could nature then no private woman grace,
Whom we might dare to love with such a face? Waller.

Expostulation is a private accusation of one friend touching another, supposed not to have dealt singly or considerately in the course of good friendship. Ayliffe.

EXPOSTULA'TOR, ĕks-pŏs'tshŭ-lā-tŭr. [521] n. s. [from expostulate.] One that debates with another without open rupture.

EXPO'STULATORY, ĕks-pŏs'tshŭ-lā-tŭr-ĕ. [463] [512] adj. [from expostulate.] Containing expostulation.

This fable is a kind of an expostulatory debate between bounty and ingratitude. L'Estrange.

EXPO'SURE, ĕks-pŏ'zhŭre. n. s. [from expose.]

1. The act of exposing or setting out to observation.

2. The state of being open to observation.

When we have our naked frailties hid,
That suffer in exposure, let us meet. Shakspeare.

3. The state of being exposed, or being liable to any thing.

Determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure to each chance
That starts i' th' way before thee. Shakspeare.

4. The state of being in danger.

Ajax sets Thersites
To match us in comparisons with dirt;
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How hard soever rounded in with danger. Shaksp.

5. Exposition; the situation in which the sun or air is received.

The cold now advancing, set such plants as will not endure the house, in pots, two or three inches lower than the surface of some bed, under a southern exposure. Evelyn.

To EXPO'UND, ĕks-pŏŭnd'. v. a. [expono, Lat.]

1. To explain; to clear; to interpret; to show the meaning of.

We cannot better interpret the meaning of those words than pope Leo himself expounded them, whose speech, concerning our Lord's ascension, may serve instead of a marginal gloss. Hooker.

This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.
—And this way you have well expounded it. Shakspeare.

He expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself. Luke.

Those right holy fathers, as in matters of faith they did not make truth, but religiously expounded it; so in matters of ecclesiastical government, they did not create provinces, but ordered the countries which they then had. Raleigh.

2. To examine; to lay open: a latinism.

He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch, with rings and lockets. Hudibras.

EXPO'UNDER, ĕks-pŏŭn'dŭr. n. s. [from expound.] Explainer; interpreter.

This they did partly as faithful witnesses; making a mere relation of what God himself had revealed unto them; and partly as careful expounders, teachers, and persuaders thereof. Hooker.

The best he was,
And faithfullest expounder of the laws. Dryden.

To EXPRE'SS, ĕks-prĕs'. v. a. [exprimo, expressus, Lat.]

1. To copy; to resemble; to represent.

So kids and whelps their sires and dams express,
And so the great I measur'd by the less. Dryden.

Adorn a dream, expressing human form
The shape of him who suffer'd in the storm. Dryd.

2. To represent by any of the imitative arts; as poetry, sculpture, painting.

Each skilful artist shall express thy form
In animated gold. Smith.

3. To represent in words; to exhibit by language; to utter; to declare.

Less than half we find exprest,
Envy bid conceal the rest. Milton.

Though they have learned those sounds, yet there are no determined ideas laid up in their minds, which are to be expressed to others by them. Locke.

In moral ideas we have no sensible marks that resemble them, whereby we can set them down: we have nothing but words to express them by. Locke.

True wit is nature to advantage drest,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well exprest. Pope.

Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for dress. Pope.

To shed tears, among the ancients, when they should express their gratitude to the gods with joy, was esteemed a prophanation. Broome.

4. To show or make known in any manner.

No longer shall thy bodice aptly lace,
That air and shape of harmony express,
Fine by degrees, and delicately less. Prior.

5. To utter; to declare: with the reciprocal pronoun.

Mr. Philips did express himself with much indignation against me one evening. Pope.

6. To denote; to designate.

Moses and Aaron took these men expressed by their names. Numbers.

7. To squeeze out; to force out by compression.

Among the watry juices of fruit are all the fruits out of which drink is expressed; as the grape, and the apple. Bacon.

8. To extort by violence, or elicite by art: a latinism.

Halters and racks cannot express from thee
More than thy deeds; 'tis only judgment waits thee. Ben Jonson.

Art did express
A quintessence even from nothingness
From dull privatives and lean emptiness. Donne.

EXPRE'SS, ĕks-prĕs'. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Copied; resembling; exactly alike.

Of his presence many a sign
Still following thee, still compassing thee round
With goodness and paternal love; his face
Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton.

2. Plain; apparent; declared in direct terms.

There hath been some doubt whether containing in scripture do import express setting down in plain terms; or else comprehending in such sort, that by reason we may from thence conclude all things which are necessary. Hooker.

There is not any positive law of men, whether general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation; but the same may be taken away, if occasion serves. Hooker.

All the gazers on the skies,
Read not in fair heav'n's story
Expresser truth, or truer glory,
Than they might in her bright eyes. Ben Jonson.

3. Clear; not dubious. This seems to be no proper use.

I love to feel myself of an express and settled judgment and affection, in things of the greatest moment. More.

As to the testimonies of the fathers, let them be never so express against all sorts of prayers and invocations, they hold only of such a sort of prayer. Stillingfleet.

Where reason or scripture is express for any opinion, or action, we may receive it as of divine authority. Locke.

4. On purpose; for a particular end.

They who are not induced to believe and live as they ought, by those discoveries which God hath made in scripture, would stand out against any evidence whatsoever; even that of a messenger sent express from the other world. Atterbury.

EXPRE'SS, êks-prês'. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A messenger sent on purpose.

The king sent an express immediately to the marquis, with all the particular informations. Clarend.

As if expresses from all parts had come,
With fresh alarms threat'ning the fate of Rome. Dryden.

Upon the first moment I was discovered, the emperor had early notice of it by an express. Gulliver.

2. A message sent.

I am content my heart should be discovered to the world, without any of those popular captations which some men use in their speeches and expresses. King Charles.

3. A declaration in plain terms. Not usual.

They do not only contradict the general design and particular expresses of the gospel, but trespass against all logick and common sense. Norris.

EXPRE'SSIBLE, êks-prês'sê-bl. adj. [from express.]

1. That may be uttered or declared.

They had not only a memory and tradition of it in general, but even of several particular accidents of it likewise, which they handed downwards to the succeeding ages, with notes of the greatest terror expressible. Woodward.

2. That may be drawn by squeezing or expression.

EXPRE'SSION, êks-prêsh'ûn. n. s. [from express.]

1. The act or power of representing any thing.

There is nothing comparable to the variety of instructive expressions by speech, wherewith a man alone is endowed, as with an instrument suitable to the excellency of his soul, for the communication of his thoughts. Holder.

2. The form or mode of language in which any thoughts are uttered.

But ill expression sometimes gives allay
To noble thoughts, whose flame shall ne'er decay. Buckingham.

The poet, to reconcile Helen to his reader, brings her in as a penitent, condemning her own infidelity in very strong expressions. Broome.

3. A phrase; a mode of speech.

4. The act of squeezing or forcing out any thing by a press.

Those juices that are so fleshy, as they cannot make drink by expression, yet may make drink by mixture of water. Bacon.

The juices of the leaves are obtained by expression; from this juice proceeds the taste. Arbuthnot.

EXPRE'SSIVE, êks-prês'sîv. adj. [from express.] Having the power of utterance or representation. With of before the thing expressed.

Each verse so swells expressive of her woes,
And ev'ry tear in lines so mournful flows,
We, spite of fame, her fate revers'd believe,
O'erlook her crimes, and think she ought to live! Tickel.

And four fair queens, whose hands sustain a flow'r,
Th' expressive emblem of their softer pow'r. Pope.

A visible and exemplary obedience to God's laws is the most expressive acknowledgment of the majesty and sovereignty of God, and disposes others to glorify him by the same observances. Rogers.

EXPRE'SSIVELY, êks-prês'sîv-lê. adv. [from expressive.] In a clear and representative way.

EXPRE'SSIVENESS, êks-prês'sîv-nês. n. s. [from expressive.] The power of expression, or representation by words.

The murrain has all the expressiveness that words can give: it was here that Virgil strained hard to outdo Lucretius. Addison.

EXPRE'SSLY, êks-prês'lê. adv. [from express.] In direct terms; plainly; not by implication; not generally.

It doth not follow, that of necessity we shall sin, unless we expressly extend this in every particular. Hooker.

Articles of belief, and things which all men must do, to the end that they may be saved, are either expressly set down in scripture, or else plainly thereby to be gathered. Hooker.

Who dare cross 'em,
Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly? Shakspeare.

The beginning of the worship of images in these western parts, was by the folly and superstition of the people, expressly against the will of their own bishop. Stillingfleet.

This account I expressly give of them, when I enter on the argument. Atterbury.

All the duties that the best political laws enjoin, as conducive to the quiet and order of social life, are expressly commanded by our religion. Rogers.

EXPRE'SSURE, êks-prêsh'ûre.[452] n. s. [from express. Now disused.]

1. Expression; utterance.

There is a mystery in the soul of state,
Which hath an operation more divine,
Than breath or pen can give expressure to. Shaksp.

2. The form; the likeness represented.

I will drop some obscure epistles of love, wherein, by the colour of his beard, the manner of his gait, the expressure of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself personated. Shaksp.

3. The mark; the impression.

And nightly, meadow fairies, look you sing,
Like to the garter-compass in a ring:
Th' expressure that it bears, green let it be,
More fertile fresh than all the field to see. Shaksp.

To E'XPROBRATE, êks-prô'brâte. v. a. [exprobro, Lat.] To charge upon with reproach; to impute openly with blame; to upbraid.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induces the providence of storks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobation not so proper. Brown.

EXPROBRA'TION, êks-prô-brâ'shûn. n. s. [from exprobrate.] Scornful charge; reproachful accusation; act of upbraiding.

The goodness we glory in, is to find out somewhat whereby we may judge others to be ungodly: each other's fault we observe as matter of exprobration, not of grief. Hooker.

The Parthians, with exprobration of Crassus's thirst after money, poured gold into his mouth after he was dead. Abbot.

It will be a denial with scorn, with a taunting exprobration; and to be miserable without commiseration, is the height of misery. South.

No need such boasts, or exprobrations false
Of cowardice: the military mound
The British files transcend in evil hour
For their proud foes. Philips.

To EXPRO'PRIATE, êks-prô'prê-âte. v. a. [ex and proprius, Lat.] To make no longer our own; to hold no longer as a property. Not in use.

When you have resigned, or rather consigned, your expropriated will to God, and thereby entrusted him to will for you, all his dispensations to wards you are, in effect, the acts of your own will. Boyle.

To EXPU'GN, êks-pûne'.[385] [386] v. a. [expugno, Lat.] To conquer; to take by assault.

EXPUGNA'TION, êks-pûg-nâ'shûn. n. s. [from expugn.] Conquest; the act of taking by assault.

The expugnation of Vienna he could never accomplish. Sandys.

To EXPU'LSE, êks-pûlse'. v. a. [expulsus, Lat.] To drive out; to expel; to force away.

For ever should they be expuls'd from France,
And not have title of an earldom there. Shaksp.

Suppose a nation where the custom were, that after full age the sons should expulse their fathers and mothers out of possessions, and put them to their pensions. Bacon.

Inwardly received, it may be very diuretick, and expulse the stone in the kidneys. Brown.

Dictys relates, that Peleus was expulsed from his kingdom by Acastus. Broome.

EXPU'LSION, êks-pûl'shûn. n. s. [from expulse.]

1. The act of expelling or driving out.

A wooer,
More hateful than the foul expulsion is,
Of thy dear husband. Shaksp.

Sole victor from th' expulsion of his foes,
Messiah his triumphal chariot turn'd. Milton.

Others think it possible so to contrive several pieces of steel and a load-stone, that, by their continual attraction and expulsion of one another, they may cause a perpetual revolution of a wheel. Wilkins.

This magnificent temple was not finished till after the expulsion of Tarquin. Stillingfleet.

Coffee-coloured urine proceeds from a mixture of a small quantity of blood with the urine; but often prognosticates a resolution of the obstructing matter, and the expulsion of gravel or a stone. Arbuthnot.

2. The state of being driven out.

To what end had the angel been sent to keep the entrance into Paradise after Adam's expulsion, if the universe had been Paradise. Raleigh.

EXPU'LSIVE, êks-pûl'sîv.[158] [423] adj. [from expulse.] Having the power of expulsion.

If the member be dependent, by raising of it up, and placing it equal with, or higher than the rest of the body, the influx may be restrained, and the part strengthened by expulsive bandages. Wiseman.

EXPU'NCTION, êks-pûngk'shûn. n. s. [from expunge.] Abolition; the act of expunging, blotting, or effacing.

To EXPU'NGE, êks-pûnje'. v. a. [expungo, Lat.]

Righteous are thy decrees on all thy works;
Who can extenuate thee? Milton's Parad. Lost.

4. To lessen in representation, to palliate: opposite to aggravate.

When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me, as I am: nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malice. Shakspeare.

Upon his examination he denied little of that wherewith he was charged, nor endeavoured much to excuse or extenuate his fault; so that, not very wisely thinking to make his offence less by confession, he made it enough for condemnation. Bacon.

Yet hear me, Samson, not that I endeavour
To lessen or extenuate my offence. Milton.

5. To make lean.

6. To make rare; opposed to dense.

The race of all things here is to extenuate and turn things to be more pneumatical and rare, and not to retrograde from pneumatical to that which is dense. Bacon.

EXTENUA'TION, êks-tên-ù-à'shûn. n. s. [from extenuate.]

1. The act of representing things less ill than they are; contrary to aggravation; palliation.

2. Mitigation; alleviation of punishment.

When sin is to be judged, the kindest inquiry is what deeds of charity we can allege in extenuation of our punishment. Atterbury.

3. A loss of plumpness, or a general decay of the muscular flesh of the whole body. Quincy.

A third sort of marasmus is an extenuation of the body, caused through an immoderate heat and dryness of the parts. Harvey.

EXTE'RIOR, êks-tê'rê-ûr. adj. [exterior, Lat.] Outward; external; not intrinsick.

And what is faith, love, virtue unessay'd
Alone, without exterior help sustain'd. Milton.

Seraphick and common lovers behold exterior beauties, as children and astronomers consider Galileo's optick glasses. Boyle.

Father, blacker, and merrier, are words which, together with the thing they denominate, imply also something else separate and exterior to the existence of that thing. Locke.

EXTE'RIORLY, êks-tê'rê-ûr-lê. adv. [from exterior.] Outwardly; externally; not intrinsically.

You have slandered nature in my form;
Which, howsoever rude exteriorly,
Is yet the cover of a fairer mind,
Than to be butcher of an innocent child. Shaks.

To EXTE'RMINATE, êks-têr'mê-nâte. v. a. [extermino, Lat.] To root out; to tear up; to drive away; to abolish; to destroy.

Unlucky vices, on which the exterminating lot happened to fall. Decay of Piety.

Alexander left Grecian colonies in the Indies; but they were exterminated by Sandrocothus. Arbuthnot on Coins.

This dicovery alone is sufficient, if the vices of men did not captivate their reason, to explode and exterminate rank atheism out of the world. Bentley.

EXTRE'ME, êks-trême'. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Utmost point; highest degree of any thing.

Thither by harpy footed furies hal'd,
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce;
From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine
Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round
Periods of time; thence hurried back to fire. Milton.

Avoid extremes, and shun the faults of such
Who still are pleas'd too little, or too much. Pope.

They cannot bear that human nature, which they know to be imperfect, should be raised to an extreme, without opposition. Pope.

2. Points at the greatest distance from each other; extremity.

The true protestant religion is situated in the golden mean; the enemies unto her are the extremes on either hand. Bacon.

The syllogystical form only shews, that if the intermediate idea agrees with those it is on both sides immediately applied to, then those two remote ones, or, as they are called, extremes do certainly agree. Locke.

EXTRE'MELY, êks-trême'lê. adv. [from extreme.]

She might hear, not far from her, an extremely doleful voice; but so suppressed with a kind of whispering note, that he could not conceive the words distinctly. Sidney.

2. Very much; greatly: in familiar language.

Whoever sees a scoundrel in a gown reeling home at midnight, is apt to be extremely comforted in his own vices. Swift.

EXTRE'MITY, êks-trêm'ê-tê. n. s. [extremitas, Lat.]

1. The utmost point; the highest degree.

He that will take away extreme heat by setting the body in extremity of cold, shall undoubtedly remove the disease; but together with it the diseased too. Hooker.

Should any one be cruel and uncharitable to that extremity, yet this would not prove that propriety gave any authority. Locke

2. The utmost parts; the parts most remote from the middle.

In its proper colour it is inclining to white, excepting the extremities or tops of the wing feathers, which are black. Brown.

The extremities of the joints must be seldom hidden, and the extremities or end of the feet never. Dryden.

The extremity of pain often creates a coldness in the extremities; but such a sensation is very consistent with an inflammatory distemper. Arbuthnot.

3. The points in the utmost degree of opposition, or at the utmost distance from each other.

He 's a man of that strange composition
Made up of all the worst extremities
Of youth and age. Denham.

4. Remotest parts; parts at the greatest distance.

They sent fleets out of the Red Sea to the extremities of Æthiopia, and imported quantities of precious goods. Arbuthnot.

5. Violence of passion.

With equal measure she did moderate
The strong extremities of their outrage. Spenser.

If I shew no colour for my extremity, let me be your table sport. Shakspeare.

6. The utmost violence, rigour, or distress.

Why should not the same laws take good effect on that people, being prepared by the sword, and brought under by extremity? Spenser.

Their hearts she guesseth,
And yields her to extremity of time. Fairy Queen.

He promised, if they should be besieged, to relieve them before they should be reduced to extremity. Clarendon.

It should be never so exposed to the extremity of war as to fall into those barbarous hands. Clarend.

I wish peace, and any terms prefer,
Before the last extremities of war. Dryden.

7. The most aggravated state.

The world is running mad after farce, the extremity of bad poetry; or rather the judgment that is fallen upon dramatic writing. Dryden.

To E'XTRICATE, êks'trê-kâte. v. a. [extrico, Lat.] To disembarrass; to set free any one in a state of perplexity; to disentangle.

We run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of. Locke.

These are reliefs to nature, as they give her an opportunity of extricating herself from her oppressions, and recovering the several tones and springs of her vessels. Addison.

EXTRICA'TION, êks-trê-kâ'shûn. n. s. [from extricate.] The act of disentangling; disentanglement.

Crude salt has a taste not properly acid, but such as predominates in brine; and it does not appear, that this acid spirit did as such pre-exist in the salt whence it was obtained, so that we may suppose it to have been made rather by transmutation than extrication. Boyle.

EXTRI'NSICAL, êks-trîn'sê-kâl. adj. [extrinsecus, Lat.] External; outward; not intimately belonging; not intrinsick. It is commonly written so, but analogy requires extrinsecal.

A body cannot move, unless it be moved by some extrinsical agent: absurd it is to think that a body, by a quality in it, can work upon itself. Digby.

Neither is the atom by any extrinsical impulse diverted from its natural course. Ray.

Outward objects, that are extrinsical to the mind; and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsical, and proper to itself, which, when reflected on by itself, become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge. Locke.

EXTRI'NSICALLY, êks-trîn'sê-kâl-ê. adv. [from extrinsical.] From without.

If to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsically advenient, be an error, almost all the world hath been mistaken. Glanville.

EXTRI'NSICK, êks-trîn'sîk. adj. [extrinsecus, Lat.] Outward; external.

When they cannot shake the main fort, they try if they can possess themselves of the outworks, raise some prejudice against his most extrinsick adherents. Gov. of the Tongue.

Extrinsick modes are such as arise from something that is not in the subject or substance itself; but it is a manner of being which some substances attain, by reason of something external or foreign to the subject; as, this globe lies within two yards of the wall; this man is beloved or hated. Watts.

To EXTRU'CT, êk-strûkt'. v. a. [extruo, extructum, Lat.] To build; to raise; to form into a structure.

EXTRU'CTOR, êk-strûk'tûr. n. s. [from extruct.] A builder; a fabricator; a contriver.

To EXTRU'DE, êks-trôôde'. v. a. [extrudo, Lat.] To thrust off; to drive off; to push out with violence.

EXU'BERANCE, êgz-ù'bê-rânse. n. s. [exuberatio, Lat.] Overgrowth; superfluous shoots; useless abundance; luxuriance.

Men esteem the overflowing of gall the exuberance of zeal, and all the promises of the faithful combatant they confidently appropriate. D. of Piety.

Though he expatiates on the same thoughts in different words, yet in his similies that exuberance is avoided. Garth.

EXU'BERANT, êgz-ù'bê-rânt. adj. [exuberans, Lat.]

1. Growing with superfluous shoots; overabundant; superfluously plenteous; luxuriant.

Another Flora there of bolder hues;
Plays o'er the fields, and showers with sudden hand
Exuberant spring. Thomson.

His similies have been thought too exuberant, and full of circumstances. Pope.

2. Abounding in the utmost degree.

Such immense power, such unsearchable wisdom, and such exuberant goodness, as may justly ravish us to an amazement, rather than a bare admiration. Boyle.

A part of that exuberant devotion, with which the whole assembly raised and animated one another, catches a reader at the greatest distance of time. Addison.

EXU'BERANTLY, êgz-ù'bê-rânt-lê. adv. [from exuberant.] Abundantly; in a superfluous degree.

A considerable quantity of the vegetable matter lay at the surface of the antediluvian earth, and rendered it exuberantly fruitful. Woodward.

To EXU'BERATE, êgz-ù'bê-râte. v. n. [exubero, Lat.] To abound in the highest degree.

All the loveliness imparted to the creature is lent it, to give us enlarged conceptions of that vast confluence and immensity that exuberates in God. Boyle.

EXU'CCOUS, ĕk-sŭk'kŭs. adj. [exsuccus, Lat.] Without juice; dry.

This is to be effected not only in the plant yet growing, but in that which is brought exuccous and dry unto us. Brown

EXUDA'TION, ĕk-sŭ-dā'shŭn. n. s. [from exudo, Lat.]

1. The act of emitting in sweat; the act of emitting moisture through the pores.

The tumour sometimes arises by a general exudation out of the cutis. Wiseman.

2. The matter issuing out by sweat from any body.

The gum of trees, shining and clear, is but a straining of the juice of the tree through the wood and bark; and Cornish diamonds, and rock rubies, which are yet more resplendent than gums, are the fine exudations of stone. Bacon.

If it hath more dew at noon than in the morning, then it seemeth to be an exudation of the herb itself. Bacon.

Cuckowspittle, or woodsere, that spumous frothy dew, or exudation, or both, is found especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary. Brown.

To EXU'DATE, ĕk-sŭ'dāte. } v. n. [exudo,
To EXU'DE, ĕk-sūde'. } Lat.] To sweat out; to issue out by sweat.

Some perforations in the part itself, through which the humour included doth exudate, may be observed in such as are fresh. Brown.

The juices of the flowers are, first, the expressed juice; secondly, a volatile oil, wherein the smell of the plant presides; thirdly, honey, exuding from all flowers, the bitter not excepted. Arbuthnot.

To EX'UDATE, ĕk-sŭ'dāte. } v. a. To force
To EX'UDE, ĕk-sūde'. } out, or throw out, as by sweat.

To EXU'LCERATE, ĕgz-ŭl'sĕ-rāte. v. a. [exulcero, Lat.]

1. To make sore with an ulcer; to affect with a running or eating sore.

Cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder and exulcerate it, if they stay on long. Bacon.

That the saliva hath a virtue of macerating bodies, appears by the effects in taking away warts, sometimes exulcerating the jaws, and rotting the teeth. Ray.

The stagnating serum turning acrimonious, exulcerates and putrifies the bowels. Arbuthnot.

2. To afflict; to corrode; to enrage;

Thoughts, my tormentors, arm'd with deadly stings,
Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts,
Exasperate, exulcerate, and raise
Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb
Or medicinal liquor can assuage. Milton.

EXULCERA'TION, ĕks-ŭl-sĕ-rā'shŭn. n. s. [from exulcerate.]

1. The beginning erosion, which wears away the substance and forms an ulcer. Quincy.

2. Exacerbation; corrosion.

This exulceration of mind made him apt to take all occasions of contradiction. Hooker.

EXU'LCERATORY, ĕgz-ŭl'sĕ-rā-tŭr-ĕ.[512] adj. [from exulcerate.] Having a tendency to cause ulcers.

To EXU'LT, ĕgz-ŭlt'. v. n. [exulto, Lat.] To rejoice above measure; to triumph; to be in high exaltation of gladness.

The whole world did seem to exult that it had occasion of pouring out gifts to so blessed a purpose. Hooker.

Who might be your mother,
That you insult, exult, and rail, at once
Over the wretched? Shaksp.

EXU'LTANCE, ĕgz-ŭl'tănse. n. s. [from exult.] Transport; joy; triumph; gladness; exultation.

We have great cause of exultance and joy, God's service being the most perfect freedom. Government of the Tongue.

EXULTA'TION, ĕks-ŭl-tā'shŭn. n. s. [exultatio, Lat.] Joy; triumph; rapturous delight.

Good effects may grow in each of the people towards other, in them all towards their pastor, and in their pastor towards every of them; between whom there daily and interchangeably pass, in the hearing of God himself, and in the presence of his holy angels, so many heavenly acclammations, exultations, provocations, petitions. Hooker.

Devotion inspires men with sentiments of religious gratitude, and swells their hearts with inward transports of joy and exultation. Addison.

To EXU'NDATE, ĕgz-ŭn'dāte. v. n. [exundo, Lat.] To overflow. Dict.

1. The organ of vision; the medium of the sense of sight.

Good sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, turn another into the register of your own, that I may pass with a reproof off the easier. Shak.

Vouchsafe, bright moon, and these thy stars to shine,
Those clouds remov'd, upon our watry eyne. Shak.

Nor doth the eye itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself,
Not going from itself; but eyes opposed,
Salute each other with each other's form. Shaksp.

He kept him as the apple of his eye. Deut.

As long looking against the sun or fire hurteth the eye by dilatation; so curious printing in small volumes, and reading of small letters, do hurt the eye by contraction. Bacon.

His awful presence did the crowd surprize,
Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;
Eyes that confess'd him born for kingly sway,
So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day. Dryden.

But sure the eye of time beholds no name
So blest as thine in all the rolls of fame. Pope.

2. Sight; ocular knowledge.

Who hath bewitched you, that you should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth? Gal.

3. Look; countenance.

I'll say yon grey is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shaksp.

4. Front; face.

To justify this worthy nobleman,
Her shall you hear disproved to your eyes. Shak.

5. A posture of direct opposition, where one thing is in the same line with another.

As one dead in the bottom of a tomb;
Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale. Shak.

Though sight be lost,
Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd
Where other senses want not their delights,
At home in leisure and domestick ease,
Exempt from many a care and chance, to which
Eyesight exposes daily men abroad. Milton.

Josephus sets this down from his own eyesight, being himself a chief captain at the siege of Jopata, where these events happened. Wilkins.

He blinds the wise, gives eyesight to the blind,
And molds and stamps anew the lover's mind. Dryden.

EY'ESORE, i'sôre. n. s. [eye and sore.] Something offensive to the sight.

Hath the church of Christ, from the first beginning, by a secret universal instinct of God's good spirit, always tied itself to end neither sermon, nor almost any speech of moment, which hath concerned matters of God, without some special words of honour and glory to the Trinity, which we all adore; and is the like conclusion of psalms become now, at length, an eyesore, or a galling to the ears that hear it? Hooker.

Fy, doff this habit; shame to your estate,
And eyesore to our solemn festival. Shaksp.

As soon as the two lords came thither they covered, to the trouble of the other; but having presently to speak, they were quickly freed from that eyesore. Clarendon.

Mordecai was an eyesore to Haman. L'Estr.

He's the best piece of man's flesh in the market; not an eyesore in his whole body. Dryden.

EYESPO'TTED, ī'spŏt-ĕd. adj. [eye and spot.] Marked with spots like eyes.

Nor Juno's bird, in her eyespotted train,
So many goodly colours doth contain. Spenser.

EYE'STRING, ī'string. n. s. [eye and string.] The string of the eye; the tendon by which the eye is moved.

I would have broke mine eyestrings; crackt them, but
To look upon him. Shaksp.

To know whether the sheep are sound or not, see that their gums be red and the eyestrings ruddy. Mortimer.

EY'ETOOTH, ī'tŏŏth. n. s. [eye and tooth.] The tooth in the upper jaw next on each side to the grinders; the fang.

The next tooth on each side stronger and deeper rooted, and more pointed, called canini, in English eyeteeth, to tear the more tough sort of aliments. Ray.

EY'EWINK, ī'wĭnk. n. s. [eye and wink.] A wink, as a hint or token.

They would have won any woman's heart; and, I warrant you, they could never get an eyewink of her. Shaksp.

EYEWI'TNESS, ī'wĭt-nĕs. n. s. [eye and witness.] An ocular evidence, one who gives testimony to facts seen with his own eyes.

We made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and were eyewitnesses of his majesty. 2 Peter.

To meet him all his saints, who silent stood
Eyewitnesses of his almighty acts,
With jubilee advanc'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

The curious, by laying together circumstances, attestations, and characters of those who are concerned in them, either receive or reject what at first but eyewitnesses could absolutely believe or disbelieve. Addison on the Christian Religion.

EYRE, âre. n. s. [eyre, French; iter, Lat.] The court of justices itinerants; and justices in eyre are those only, which Bracton in many places calls justiciarios itinerantes. The eyre also of the forest is nothing but the justice-seat, otherwise called; which is, or should, by ancient custom, be held every three years by the justices of the forest, journeying up and down to that purpose. Cowell.

EY'RY, â'rė. n. s. [from ey an egg.] The place where birds of prey build their nests and hatch.

But I was born so high,
Our eyrie buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

The eagle, and the stork,
On cliffs and cedar-tops their eyries build. Milton.

Some haggard hawk, who had her eyry nigh,
Well pounc'd to fasten, and well wing'd to fly.
Dryden.

F.

F, A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Scaliger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, which yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound formed by compression of the whole lips and a forcible breath. Its kindred letter is V, which in the Islandick alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

FABA'CEOUS, fâ-bâ'shė-ŭs.[357] adj. [fabaceus, Lat.] Having the nature of a bean. Dict.

FA'BLE, fâ'bl.[405] n. s. [fable, French; fabula, Latin.]

1. A feigned story intended to enforce some moral precept.

Jotham's fable of the trees is the oldest extant, and as beautiful as any made since. Addison.

2. A fiction in general.

Triptolemus, so sung the nine,
Strew'd plenty from his cart divine;
But spite of all those fable-makers,
He never sow'd on Almaign acres. Dryden.

Palladius coming to die somewhere in the north part of Britain, may seem to give some kind of countenance to those fables that make him to have lived many years among the Scots. Lloyd.

3. A vitious or foolish fiction.

But refuse profane and old wives' fables.
1 Timothy.

4. The series or contexture of events which constitute a poem epick or dramatick.

The moral is the first business of the poet: this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden.

The first thing to be considered in an epick poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect according as the action, which it relates, is more or less so. Addison's Spectator.

5. A lie; a vitious falsehood. This sense is merely familiar.

It would look like a fable to report that this gentleman gives away a great fortune by secret methods. Addison.

To FA'BLE, fâ'bl. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feign; to write not truth but fiction.

That Saturn's sons receiv'd the three-fold reign
Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath,
Old poets mention fabling. Prior.

Vain now the tales which fabling poets tell,
That wav'ring conquest still desires to rove!
In Marlbro's camp the goddess knows to dwell.
Prior.

2. To tell falsehoods; to lie: a familiar use.

He fables not: I hear the enemy. Shaksp.

To FA'BLE, fâ'bl. v. a. To feign; to tell falsely.

We mean to win,
Or turn this heaven itself into the hell
Thou fablest. Milton's Par. Lost.

Ladies of th' Hesperides, they seem'd
Fairer than fam'd of old, or fabl'd since
Of fairy damsels met in forest wide,
By knights. Milton's Par. Lost.

FA'BLED, fâ'bl'd.[359] adj. [from fable.] Celebrated in fables.

Hail, fabled grotto! hail, Elysian soil!
Thou fairest spot of fair Britannia's isle! Tickel.

To FA'BRICATE, fâb'rė-kâte. v. a. [fabricor, Latin.]

1. To build; to construct.

2. To forge; to devise falsely. This sense is retained among the Scotish lawyers; for when they suspect a paper to be forged, they say it is fabricated.

FABRICA'TION, fâb-rė-kâ'shŭn. n. s. [from fabricate.] The act of building; construction.

This fabrication of the human body is the immediate work of a vital principle, that formeth the first rudiments of the human nature. Hale.

FA'BRICK, fâb'rĭk, or fâ'brĭk. n. s. [fabrica, Latin.]

1. A building; an edifice.

There must be an exquisite care to place the columns, set in several stories, most precisely one over another, that so the solid may answer to the solid, and the vacuities to the vacuities, as well for beauty as strength of the fabrick. Wotton.

2. Any system or compages of matter; any body formed by the conjunction of dissimilar parts.

Still will ye think it strange,
That all the parts of this great fabrick change;
Quit their old station and primeval frame. Prior.

To FA'BRICK, fâb'rĭk. v. a. [from the noun.] To build; to form; to construct.

Shew what laws of life
The cheese inhabitants observe, and how Fabrick their mansions. Philips.

FA'BULOUS, fâb'ù-lûs. adj [fabulosus, Lat.] Feigned; full of fables, or invented tales.

A person terrified with the imagination of spectres, is more reasonable than one who thinks the appearance of spirits fabulous and groundless. Addison's Spectator.

FA'BULOUSLY, fâb'ù-lûs-lè. adv. [from fabulous.] In fiction; in a fabulous manner.

There are many things fabulously delivered, and are not to be accepted as truths. Brown.

FACE, fâse. n. s. [face, French, from facies, Latin.]

1. The visage.

The children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses' face shone. Exodus.

A man shall see faces, which, if you examine them part by part, you shall never find good; but take them together, are not uncomely. Bacon.

From beauty still to beauty ranging,
In every face I found a dart. Addison's Spect.

2. Countenance; cast of the features; look; air of the face.

Kick'd out, we set the best face on 't we could. Dryden's Virgil.

Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I!
Who can't be silent, and who will not lye:
To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope.

3. The surface of any thing.

A mist watered the whole face of the ground. Genesis.

4. The front or forepart of any thing.

The breadth of the face of the house, towards the east, was an hundred cubits. Ezekiel.

5. Visible state of affairs.

He look'd, and saw the face of things quite chang'd,
The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton.

This would produce a new face of things in Europe. Addison.

6. Appearance; resemblance; look.

Keep still your former face, and mix again
With these lost spirits; run all their mazes with 'em;
For such are treasons. Ben Jonson.

At the first shock, with blood and powder stain'd,
Nor heav'n, nor sea, their former face retain'd;
Fury and art produce effects so strange,
They trouble nature, and her visage change. Waller.

His dialogue has so much the face of probability, that some have mistaken it for a real conference. Baker.

7. Presence, sight; state of confrontation.

Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall slay her before his face. Numbers.

Jove cannot fear; then tell me to my face,
That I of all the gods am least in grace. Dryden.

8. Confidence; boldness; freedom from bashfulness or confusion.

They're thinking, by his face,
To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so. Shakspeare's Julius Cæsar.

How many things are there which a man cannot with any face or comeliness, say or do himself? A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them: a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg. Bacon.

You'll find the thing will not be done
With ignorance and face alone. Hudibras.

You, says the judge to the wolf, have the face to challenge that which you never lost; and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have stolen. L'Estrange.

This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations. Tillotson.

9. Distortion of the face.

Shame itself!
Why do you make such faces? Shakspeare.

FACE to FACE, fâse-tò-fâse. [An adverbial expression.]

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have his accusers face to face. Acts.

2. Nakedly; without the interposition of other bodies.

Now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face. 1 Cor.

To FACE, fâse. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To carry a false appearance; to play the hypocrite.

Thou needs must learn to laugh, to lye,
To face, to forge, to scoff, to company. Hub. Tale.

2. To turn the face; to come in front.

Face about, man; a soldier, and afraid of the enemy. Dryden.

Then thrice the mounted squadrons ride around
The fire, and Arcite's name they thrice resound;
Hail and farewell they shouted thrice amain,
Thrice facing to the left, and thence they turn'd again. Dryden.

To FACE, fâse. v. a.

1. To meet in front; to oppose with confidence and firmness.

I 'll face
This tempest, and deserve the name of king. Dryden.

We get intelligence of the force of the enemy, and cast about for a sufficient number of troops to face the enemy in the field of battle. Addison.

They are as loth to see the fires kindled in Smithfield as his lordship; and, at least, as ready to face them under a popish persecution. Swift.

2. To oppose with impudence: commonly with down.

We trepann'd the state, and fac'd it down
With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras.

Because he walk'd against his will,
He fac'd men down that he stood still. Prior.

3. To stand opposite to.

On one side is the head of the emperor Trajan; the reverse has on it the Circus Maximus, and a view of the side of the Palatine mountain that faces it. Addison on Italy.

The temple is described square, and the four fronts with open gates, facing the different quarters of the world. Pope.

4. To cover with an additional superficies; to invest with a covering.

Hating that solemn vice of greatness, pride,
I mean each softest virtue there should meet,
Fit in that softer bosom to reside. Ben Jonson.

Raphael now, to Adam's doubt propos'd,
Benevolent and facile, thus reply'd. Milton.

4. Pliant; flexible; easily persuaded to good or bad; ductile to a fault.

Too facile then, thou didst not much gainsay;
Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milton.

Since Adam, and his facile consort Eve
Lost Paradise, deceiv'd by me. Milton.

Some men are of that facile temper, that they are wrought upon by every object that they converse with, whom any affectionate discourse, or serious sermon, or any notable accident, shall put into a fit of religion, which yet usually lasts no longer than till somewhat else comes in their way. Calamy.

To FACI'LITATE, fâ-sîl'è-tâte. v. a. [faciliter, Fr.] To make easy; to free from difficulty; to clear from impediments.

Choice of the likeliest and best prepared metal for the version will facilitate the work. Bacon.

They renewed their assault two or three days together, and planted cannon to facilitate their passage, which did little hurt; but they still lost many men in the attempt. Clarendon.

Though perspective cannot be called a certain rule of picture, yet it is a great succour and relief to art, and facilitates the means of execution. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

What produceth a due quantity of animal spirits, necessarily facilitates the animal and natural motions. Arbuthnot on Diet.

A war on the side of Italy would cause a great diversion of the French forces, and facilitate the progress of our arms in Spain. Swift.

FACI'LITY, fâ-sîl'ê-tê. n. s. [facilitè, Fr. facilitas, Latin.]

1. Easiness to be performed; freedom from difficulty.

Yet reason saith, reason shlud have ability
To hold these worldly things in such proportion,
As let them come or go with even facility. Sidney.

Piety could not be diverted from this to a more commodious business by any motives of profit or facility. Raleigh.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other gentiles, both in point of religion and in point of honour, though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon.

2. Readiness in performing; dexterity.

They who have studied have not only learned many excellent things, but also have acquired a great facility of profiting themselves by reading good authors. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The facility which we get of doing things, by a custom of doing, makes them often pass in us without our notice. Locke.

3. Vitious ductility; easiness to be persuaded to good or bad; ready compliance.

Facility is worse than bribery; for bribes come now and then: but if importunity or idle respects lead a man, he shall never be without them. Bacon.

'Tis a great error to take facility for good nature; tenderness without discretion, is no better than a more pardonable folly. L'Estrange.

4. Easiness of access; complaisance; condescension; affability.

He opens and yields himself to the man of business with difficulty and reluctancy; but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of appetite and desire. South.

FACI'NOROUSNESS, fâ-sîn'ô-rûs-nês. n. s. [from facinorous.] Wickedness in a high degree.

FACT, fâkt. n. s. [factum, Latin.]

1. A thing done; an effect produced; something not barely supposed or suspected, but really done.

In matter of fact they say there is some credit to be given to the testimony of man; but not in matter of opinion and judgment: we see the contrary both acknowledged and universally practised all throughout the world. Hooker.

As men are not to mistake the causes of these operations, so much less are they to mistake the fact or effect, and rashly to take that for done which is not done. Bacon.

Those effects which are wrought by the percussion of the sense, and by things in fact, are produced likewise in some degree by the imagination: therefore if a man see another eat sour or acid things, which set the teeth on edge, that object tainteth the imagination. Bacon.

Matter of fact breaks out and blazes with too great an evidence to be denied. South.

2. Reality; not supposition; not speculation.

If this were true in fact, I do not see any colour for such a conclusion. Addison.

Manifold sins, though in speculation they may be separable from war, in reality and fact never fail to attend it. Smalridge.

3. Action; deed.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause:
Howe'er the doubtful fact is understood,
'Tis love of honour and his country's good;
The consul, not the father, sheds the blood.
Dryden.

FA'CTION, fâk'shûn. n. s. [faction, French; factio, Latin.]

1. A party in a state.

The queen is valued thirty thousand strong;
If she hath time to breathe, be well assur'd

And kingly government of this your land:
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shakspeare.

Piercy is but my factor, good my lord,
T' engross up glorious deeds on my behalf.
Shakspeare.

You all three,
The senators alone of this great world,
Chief factors for the Gods. Shakspeare.

We agreed that I should send up an English factor, that whatsoever the island could yield should be delivered at a reasonable rate. Raleigh.

The Scots had good intelligence, having some factors doubtless at this mart, albeit they did not openly trade. Hayward.

Vile arts and restless endeavours are used by some sly and venomous factors for the old republican cause. South.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged, by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sorts, sects, and persuasions, into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules and orders of our church, and that, therefore, they ought to be taken away. South.

Forc'd into exile from his rightful throne,
He made all countries where he came his own;
And viewing monarchs' secret arts of sway,
A royal factor for their kingdoms lay. Dryden.

2. [In arithmetick.] The multiplicator and multiplicand. Harris.

FA'CULTY, fâk'ûl-tê. n. s. [faculté, French; facultas, Latin.]

1. The power of doing any thing; ability: whether corporeal or intellectual.

There is no kind of faculty or power in man, or any creature, which can rightly perform the functions allotted to it without perpetual aid and concurrence of that supreme cause of all things. Hooker.

Orators may grieve; for in their sides,
Rather than heads, their faculty abides. Denham.

Reason in man supplies the defect of other faculties wherein we are inferior to beasts, and what we cannot compass by force we bring about by stratagem. L' Estrange.

2. Powers of the mind, imagination, reason, memory.

I understand in the prime end
Of nature, her the inferior; in the mind
And inward faculties, which most excel. Milton.

In the ordinary way of speaking, the understanding and will are two faculties of the mind. Locke.

Neither did our Saviour think it necessary to explain to us the nature of God, because it would be impossible, without bestowing on us other faculties than we possess at present. Swift.

3. Mechanical power.

The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge used in cleaving wood. Wilkins.

4. In physick.

A power or ability to perform any action, natural, vital, and animal: by the first they understand that by which the body is nourished, or another like it generated: the vital faculty is that by which life is preserved, and the ordinary functions of the body performed; and the animal faculty is what conducts the operations of the mind. Quincy.

5. A knack; habitual excellence; dexterity.

He had none of those faculties which the other had, of reconciling men to him. Clarendon.

Our author found out monarchical absolute power in that text, he had an exceeding good faculty to find it himself where he could not shew it others. Locke.

He had an excellent faculty in preaching if he were not too refined. Swift.

6. Quality personal; disposition or habit of good or ill.

1. To tend from greater to less vigour; to grow weak; to languish.

2. To tend from a brighter to a weaker colour.

The greenness of a leaf ought to pass for apparent, because soon fading into a yellow, it scarce lasts at all, in comparison of the greenness of an emerald. Boyle.

The spots in this stone are of the same colour throughout, even to the very edges; there being an immediate transition from white to black, and the colours not fading or declining gradually. Woodward.

3. To wither, as a vegetable.

Ye shall be as an oak whose leaf fadeth, and as a garden that hath no water. Isaiah.

4. To die away gradually; to vanish; to be worn out.

Where either through the temper of the body, or some other default, the memory is very weak, ideas in the mind quickly fade. Locke.

The stars shall fade away, the sun himself
Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years. Addison.

5. To be naturally not durable; to be transient; to lose vigour or beauty easily

The glorious beauty on the head of the fat valley shall be a fading flower. Isaiah.

The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours, and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and dissappear. Locke.

Narcissus' change to the vain virgin shows,
Who trusts to beauty, trusts the fading rose. Gay.

To FADE, fâde. v. a. To wear away; to reduce to languor; to deprive of freshness or vigour; to wither.

This is a man, old, wrinkled, faded, withered;
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Shaks.

His palms, though under weights they did not stand,
Still thriv'd; no winter could his laurels fade. Dryden.

Restless anxiety, forlorn despair,
And all the faded family of care. Garth.

To FADGE, fâdje. v. n. [ȝeþeȝan, Saxon; fugen, German.]

1. To suit; to fit; to have one part consistent with another.

How will this fadge! my master loves her dearly,
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to doat on me. Shaksp.

2. To agree; not to quarrel; to live in amity.

When they thriv'd they never fadg'd,
But only by the ears engag'd;
That dogs that snarl about a bone,
And play together when they've none. Hudibras.

3. To succeed; to hit.

The fox had a fetch; and when he saw it would not fadge, away goes he presently. L' Estrange.

4. This is a mean word not now used, unless perhaps in ludicrous and low compositions.

2. The refuse, or meaner part of any thing.

In the world's fagend
A nation lies. Fanshaw.

When they are the worst of their way, and fixt in the fagend of business, they are apt to look not kindly upon those who go before them. Collier.

FA'GOT, fâg'ût.[88 166] n. s. [fagod, Welsh and Armorick; fagot, French.]

1. A bundle of sticks bound together for the fire.

About the pile of fagots, sticks, and hay,
The bellows raised the newly-kindled flame. Fairfax.

Spare for no fagots, let there be enow;
Place pitchy barrels on the fatal stake. Shaksp.

Mitres or fagots, have been the rewards of different persons, according as they pronounced these consecrated syllables or not. Watts.

2. A bundle of sticks for any purpose.

The Black Prince filled a ditch with fagots as successfully as the generals of our times do it with fascines. Addison.

3. A soldier numbered in the muster roll, but not really existing.

To FA'GOT, fâg'ût. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie up; to bundle together.

He was too warm on picking work to dwell,
But fagoted his notions as they fell,
And if they rhym'd and rattled, all was well. Dryden.

To FAIL, fâle.[202] v. n. [failler, French, faeln, Welsh. Pezron.]

1. To be deficient; to cease from former plenty; to fall short; not to be equal to demand or use.

The waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up. Job.

There fail where virtue fails, or weakest prove
Where boldest, though to fight unconquerable? Milton.

Where the credit and money fail, barter alone must do. Locke.

2. To be extinct; to cease; to be no longer produced.

Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men. Psalms.

Whether such virtue spent of old now fail'd
More angels to create. Milton.

3. To cease; to perish; to be lost.

By fate the strength of gods
And this empyreal substance cannot fail. Milton.

For Titan, by the mighty loss dismay'd,
Among th' heav'ns th' immortal fact display'd,
Lest the remembrance of his grief should fail. Addison.

4. To die; to lose life.

Had the king in his last sickness fail'd,
Their heads should have gone off. Shakspeare.

Both he that helpeth shall fall, and he that is holpen shall fall down, and they all shall fail together. Isaiah.

5. To sink; to be born down; to come to an end.

Neither will I be always wroth; for the spirit should fail before me. Isaiah.

His works, which in our fall,
For us created, needs with us must fail,
Dependent made. Milton.

6. To decay; to decline; to languish.

Let none henceforth seek needless cause t' approve
The faith they owe; when earnestly they seek
Such proof, conclude they then begin to fail. Milton.

I perceive
Thy mortal sight to fail; objects divine
Must needs impair and weary human sense. Milton.

7. To miss; not to produce its effect.

Consider of deformity not as a sign, which is deceivable, but as a cause which seldom faileth of the effect. Bacon.

All these puissant legions, whose exile
Hath emptied heav'n, shall fail to re-ascend. Milton.

This jest was first of th' other house's making,
And, five times try'd, has never fail'd of taking. Dryden.

He does not remember whether every grain came up or not; but he thinks that very few failed. Mortimer.

8. To miss; not to succeed in a design; to miscarry.

I am enjoin'd, by oath, if I fail
Of the right casket, never in my life
To woo a maid in way of marriage. Shakspeare.

At least our envious foe hath fail'd, who thought
All like himself rebellious. Milton.

In difficulties of state, the true reason of failing proceeds from failings in the administration. L' Estrange.

Men who have been busied in the pursuit of the philosopher's stone, have failed in their design. Addison.

9. To be deficient in duty.

Or nature fail'd in me, and left some part
Not proof enough such object to sustain, Milton.

Endeavour to fulfil God's commands, to repent as often as you fail of it, and to hope for pardon of him. Wake.

To FAIL, fâle. v. a.

1. To desert; not to continue to assist or supply; to disappoint.

The ship was now left alone, as proud lords be when fortune fails them. Sidney.

So hast thou oft with guile thine honour blent;
But little may such guile thee now avail,
If wonted force and fortune do not much me fail.
Spenser.

There shall be signs in the sun, the moon, and the stars, men's hearts failing them for fear. Luke.

Nor could the muse defend
Her son, so fail not thou who thee implores.
Milton.

I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
And vent'rous, if that fail them, shrink and fear.
Milton.

Her heart failed her, and she would fain have compounded for her life. L' Estrange.

He presumes upon his parts that they will not fail him at time of need, and so thinks it superfluous labour to make any provision beforehand. Locke.

2. Not to assist; to neglect; to omit to help.

Since nature fails us in no needful thing,
Why want I means my inward self to see. Davies.

3. To omit; not to perform.

The inventive God who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit when once he warms the heart.
Dryden.

4. To be wanting to.

There shall not fail thee a man on the throne.
1 Kings.

FAIL, fâle. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Miscarriage; miss; unsuccessfulness.

2. Omission; non-performance.

Mark and perform it, seest thou? for the fail
Of any point in't shall not only be
Death to thyself, but to thy lewd tongu'd wife.
Shakspeare.

He will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites. Joshua.

3. Deficience; want.

4. Death; extinction.

How grounded he his title to the crown
Upon our fail? Shakspeare.

FA'ILING, fâ'ling. n. s. [from fail.] Deficiency; imperfection; fault not atrocious; lapse.

Besides what failings may be in the matter, even in the expressions there must often be great obscurities. Digby.

To failings mild, but zealous for desert;
The clearest head and the sincerest heart. Pope.

Even good men have many temptations to subdue, many conflicts with those enemies which war against the soul, and many failings and lapses to lament and recover. Rogers.

FAI'LURE, fâle'yûre.[113] n. s. [from fail.]

1. Deficience; cessation.

There must have been an universal failure and want of springs and rivers all the summer season. Woodward.

2. Omission; non-performance; slip.

He that being subject to an apoplexy, used still to carry his remedy about him; but upon a time shifting his clothes, and not taking that with him, chanced upon that very day to be surprised with a fit: he owed his death to a mere accident, to a little inadvertency and failure of memory. South.

3. A lapse; a slight fault.

FAIN, fâne.[202] adj. [ꝼeagn, Sax.]

1. Glad; merry; cheerful; fond. It is still retained in Scotland in this sense.

And in her hand she held a mirrour bright,

My lips will be fain when I sing unto thee, and so will my soul whom thou hast delivered. Psalms.

2. Forced; obliged; compelled. [This signification seems to have arisen from the mistake of the original signification in some ambiguous expressions: as, I was fain to do this, would equally suit with the rest of the sentence, whether it was understood to mean I was compelled, or I was glad to do it for fear of worse. Thus the primary meaning seems to have been early lost.]

Every weight to shroud it did constrain,
And this fair couple eke to shroud themselves were fain. Spenser.

Whosoever will hear, he shall find God; whosoever will study to know, shall be also fain to believe. Hooker.

I was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar. Shaksp.

When Hildebrand had accused Henry IV. there were none so hardy as to defend their lord; wherefore he was fain to humble himself before Hildebrand. Raleigh.

The learned Castalio was fain to make trenches at Basle, to keep himself from starving. Locke.

FAIN, fâne. adv. [from the adjective.] Gladly; very desirously; according to earnest wishes.

Now I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground; I would fain die a dry death. Shaksp.

Why wouldst thou urge me to confess a flame
I long have stifled, and would fain conceal.
Addison's Cato.

Fain would I Raphael's godlike art rehearse,
And show th' immortal labours in my verse.
Addison.

The plebeians would fain have a law enacted to lay all men's rights and privileges upon the same level. Swift.

To FAIN, fâne. v. n. [from the noun.] To wish; to desire fondly.

Fairer than fairest, in his faining eye,
Whose sole aspect he counts felicity. Spenser.

To FAINT, fânt.[202] v. n. [faner, Fr.]

1. To decay; to wear or waste away quickly.

Gilded clouds while we gaze upon them, faint before the eye, and decay into confusion. Pope.

The show'ry arch
Delights and puzzles the beholders' eyes
That views the wat'ry brede with thousand shews
Of painture vary'd; yet unskill'd to tell
Or where one colour rises, or where one faints.
Philips.

2. To lose the animal functions; to sink motionless and senseless.

Their young children were out of heart, and their women and young men fainted for thirst, and fell down. Judith.

Faint heart never won fair lady. Camden.

Our faint Egyptians pray for Antony;
But in their servile hearts they own Octavius.
Dryden.

6. Dejected; depressed.

Consider him that endureth such contradiction against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds. Hebrews.

7. Not vigorous; not active.

The defects which hindered the conquest, were the faint prosecution of the war, and the looseness of the civil government. Davies.

FAINTHEA'RTED, fânt-hârt'êd. adj. [faint and heart.] Cowardly; timorous; dejected; easily depressed.

Fear not, neither be fainthearted. Isaiah.

They should resolve the next day, as victorious conquerors, to take the city, or else there as fainthearted cowards, to end their days. Knolles.

Now the late fainthearted rout
O'erthrown and scatter'd round about,
Chas'd by the horrour of their fear,
From bloody fray of knight and bear,
Took heart again and fac'd about,
As if they meant to stand it out. Hudibras.

Villain, stand off! base, groveling, worthless wretches, mongrels in faction, poor fainthearted traitors. Addison.

FAINTHEA'RTEDLY, fânt'hârt'êd-lê. adv. [from fainthearted.] Timorously; in a cowardly manner.

FA'INTISHNESS, fânt'ish-nês. n. s. [from faint.] Weakness in a slight degree; incipient debility.

A certain degree of heat lengthens and relaxes the fibres; whence proceeds the sensation of faintishness and debility in a hot day. Arbuthnot.

FA'INTLING, fânt'ling. adj. [from faint.] Timorous; feebleminded. A burlesque or low word.

There's no having patience, thou art such a faintling silly creature. Arbuthnot.

FA'INTLY, fânt'lê. adv. [from faint.]

1. Feebly; languidly.

Love's like a torch, which, if secur'd from blasts,
Will faintly burn; but then it longer lasts:
Expos'd to storms of jealousy and doubt,
The blaze grows greater, but 'tis sooner out. Walsh.

2. Not in bright colours.

Nature affords at least a glimm'ring light;
The lines, tho' touch'd but faintly, are drawn right. Pope.

3. Without force of representation.

I have told you what I have seen and heard but faintly; nothing like the image and horrour of it. Shaksp.

An obscure and confused idea represents the object so faintly, that it doth not appear plain to the mind. Watts.

4. Without strength of body.

With his loll'd tongue he faintly licks his prey,
His warm breath blows her flix up as she lies. Dryden.

5. Not vigorously; not actively.

Though still the famish'd English, like pale ghosts,
Faintly besiege us one hour in a month. Shaksp.

6. Timorously; with dejection; without spirit.

So much his love was dearer than his life. Denham.

FA'INTNESS, fânt'nês. n. s. [from faint.]

1. Languor; feebleness; want of strength.

If the prince of the lights of heaven, which now as a giant doth run his unwearied courses, should through a languishing faintness begin to stand. Hooker.

This proceeded not from any violence of pain, but from a general languishing and faintness of spirits, which made him think nothing worth the trouble of one careful thought. Temple.

2. Inactivity; want of vigour.

This evil proceeds rather of the unsoundness of the counsels, or of faintness in following and effecting the same, than of any such fatal course appointed of God. Spenser.

3. Timorousness; dejection.

The paleness of this flow'r
Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart. Shakspeare.

FA'INTY, fânt'ê. adj. [from faint.] Weak; feeble; languid; debilitated; enfeebled.

When winter frosts constrain the field with cold,
The fainty root can take no steady hold. Dryden.
The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew, no longer air but fire:
The fainty knights were scorch'd, and knew not where
To run for shelter; for no shade was near. Dryd.

FAIR, fâre.[202] adj. [ꝼæger, Saxon; faur, Danish.]

1. Beautiful; elegant of feature; handsome. Fair seems in the common acceptation to be restrained, when applied to women, to the beauty of the face.

He only fair, and what he fair hath made,
All other fair like flowers untimely fade. Spenser.
Thou art a fair woman to look upon. Genesis.

2. Not black; not brown; white in the complexion.

I never yet saw man,
But she would spell him backward; if fair fac'd,
She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister;
If black, why, nature, drawing of an antick,
Made a foul blot. Shaksp.

Let us look upon men in several climates: the Ethiopians are black, flat-nosed, and crisp haired; the Moors tawny; the Northern people large, and fair complexioned. Hale.

3. Pleasing to the eye; excellent or beautiful in general to the eye or mind.

That which made her fairness much the fairer was that it was but an ambassador of a most fair mind. Sidney.

Carry him gently to my fairest chamber,
And hang it round with all my wanton pictures. Shaksp.

Thus was he fair in his greatness, and in the length of his branches. Ezekiel.

For as by depredations wasps proclaim
The fairest fruit, so these the fairest fame. Young.

4. Clear; pure.

A standard of a damask rose, with the root on, was set in a chamber where no fire was, upright in an earthen pan, full of fair water, half a foot under the water. Bacon.

Even fair water, falling upon white paper or linen, will immediately alter the colour of them, and make it sadder than that of the unwetted parts. Boyle.

5. Not cloudy; not foul; not tempestuous.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shaksp.
Fair weather cometh out of the north. Job.
About three of the clock in the afternoon, the weather was very fair and very warm. Clarendon.

6. Favourable; prosperous: as, a fair wind.

In vain you tell your parting lover,
You wish fair winds may waft him over. Prior.

7. Likely to succeed.

As any comer I have look'd on yet
For my affection. Shaksp.

The caliphs obtained a mighty empire, which was in a fair way to have enlarged, until they fell out. Raleigh.

O pity and shame! that they who to live well,
Enter'd so fair, should turn aside to tread
Paths indirect, or in the midway faint. Milton.

8. Equal; just.

The king did so much desire a peace, that no man need advise him to it, or could divert him from it, if fair and honourable conditions of peace were offered to him. Clarendon.

9. Not effected by any insidious or unlawful methods; not foul.

After all these conquests he passed the rest of his age in his own native country, and died a fair and natural death. Temple.

10. Not practising any fraudulent or insidious arts; as, a fair rival, a fair disputant.

Virtuous and vicious ev'ry man must be,
Few in th' extreme, but all in the degree;
The rogue and fool by fits is fair and wise,
And ev'n the best, by fits, what they despise. Pope.

11. Open; direct.

For still, methought she sung not far away;
At last I found her on a laurel spray:
Close by my side she sat, and fair in sight,
Full in a line, against her opposite. Dryden.

12. Gentle; mild; not compulsory.

All the lords came in, and being by fair means wrought thereunto, acknowledged king Henry. Spenser.

For to reduce her by main force,
Is now in vain; by fair means, worse. Hudibras.

13. Mild; not severe.

Not only do'st degrade them, or remit
To life obscur'd, which were a fair dismission;
But throw'st them lower than thou did'st exalt them high. Milton.

14. Pleasing; civil.

Good sir, why do you start, and seem to fear
Things that do sound so fair? Shaksp.

When fair words and good counsel will not prevail upon us, we must be frightened into our duty. L'Estrange.

15. Equitable; not injurious.

His doom is fair,
That dust I am, and shall to dust return. Milton.

16. Commodious; easy.

Hereby upon the edge of yonder coppice,
A stand where you may make the fairest shoot. Shaksp.

I looked for the jugular veins, opened the fairest, and took away a dozen ounces of blood. Wiseman.

17. Liberal; not narrow.

He through his virtue was as free from greediness, as through his fair livelihood, far from neediness. Carew.

FAIR, fâre. adv. [from the adjective.]

1. Gently; decently; without violence.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end, than he that runs after every one, though he gallop. Locke.

2. Civilly; complaisantly.

Well, you must now speak sir John Falstaff fair. Shaksp.

One of the company spoke him fair, and would have stopt his mouth with a crust. L' Estrange.

In this plain fable you th' effect may see
Of negligence, and fond credulity:
And learn besides of flatt'rers to beware,
Then most pernicious when they speak too fair. Dryden.

His promise Palemon accepts; but pray'd
To keep it better than the first he made:
Thus fair they parted, 'till the morrow's dawn;
For each had laid his plighted faith to pawn. Dryden.

Kalib ascend, my fair spoke servant rise,
And soothe my heart with pleasing prophecies. Dryden.

This promised fair at first. Addison.

3. Happily; successfully.

O, princely Buckingham, I'll kiss thy hand,
In sign of league and amity with thee:
Now fair befall thee and thy noble house!
Thy garments are not spotted with our blood. Shak.

4. On good terms.

There are other nice, though inferior cases, in which a man must guard, if he intends to keep fair with the world, and turn the penny. Collier.

FAIR, fâre. n. s.

1. A beauty; elliptically a fair woman.

Of sleep forsaken, to relieve his care,
He sought the conversation of the fair. Dryden.

Gentlemen who do not design to marry, yet pay their devoirs to one particular fair. Spectator.

2. Honesty; just dealing.

I am not much for that present; we'll settle it between ourselves; fair and square, Nic, keep friends together. Arbuthnot.

FAIR, fâre. n. s. [foire, Fr. feriæ or forum, Lat.] An annual or stated meeting of buyers and sellers; a time of traffick more frequented than a market. The privilege of holding fairs in England is granted by the king.

With silver, iron, tin, and lead, they traded in thy fairs. Ezekiel.

His corn, his cattle, were his only care,
And his supreme delight a country fair. Dryden.

The ancient Nundinæ, or fairs of Rome, were kept every ninth day: afterwards the same privileges were granted to the country markets, which were at first under the power of the consuls. Arbuthnot.

FA'IRING, fâre'ing. n. s. [from fair.] A present given at a fair

Sweetheart, we shall be rich ere we depart,
If fairings come thus plentifully in. Shaksp.

Like children that esteem every trifle, and prefer a fairing before their fathers. Ben Jonson

Now he goes on, and sings of fairs and shows;
For still new fairs before his eyes arose:
How pedlars' stalls with glitt'ring toys are laid,
The various fairings of the country maid. Gay.

FA'IRLY, fâre-lè. adv. [from fair.]

1. Beautifully: as, a city fairly situate.
2. Commodiously; conveniently; suitably to any purpose or design.

'Waiting 'till willing winds their sails supply'd,
Within a trading town they long abide,
Full fairly situate on a haven's side. Dryden.

3. Honestly; justly; without shift; without fraud; not foully.

It is a double misfortune to a nation, which is thus given to change, when they have a sovereign that is prone to fall in with all the turns and veerings of the people. Addison.

You will find it difficult to persuade learned men to fall in with your projects. Addison.

That prince applied himself first to the church of England, and, upon their refusal to fall in with his measures, made the like advances to the dissenters. Swift.

50. To FALL off. To separate; to be broken.

Love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide; in cities, mutinies; in countries, discord. Shaksp.

51. To FALL off. To perish; to die away.

Languages need recruits to supply the place of those words that are continually falling off through disuse. Felton.

52. To FALL off. To apostatize; to revolt; to forsake.

Oh, Hamlet, what a falling off was there! Shaksp.
Revolted Mortimer?
—He never did fall off, my sovereign liege,
But by the chance of war. Shaksp.

They, accustomed to afford at other times either silence or short assent to what he did purpose, did then fall off and forsake him. Hayward.

What cause
Mov'd our grand parents, in that happy state,
Favour'd of Heav'n so highly, to fall off
From their Creator, and transgress his will? Milt.
Those captive tribes fell off
From God to worship calves. Milton.

Were I always grave, one half of my readers would fall off from me. Addison.

53. To FALL on. To begin eagerly to do any thing.

Some coarse cold sallad is before thee set;
Bread with the bran, perhaps, and broken meat,
Fall on, and try thy appetite to eat. Dryden.

54. To FALL on. To make an assault; to begin the attack.

They fell on, I made good my place: at length they came to the broomstaff with me: I defied 'em still. Shaksp.

Fall on, fall on, and hear him not;
But spare his person for his father's sake. Dryden.

Draw all; and when I give the word, fall on.
Oedipus.

He pretends, among the rest, to quarrel with me, to have fallen foul on priesthood. Dryden.

55. To FALL over. To revolt; to desert from one side to the other.

And do'st thou now fall over to my foes?
Thou wear a lion's hide! doff it, for shame,
And hang a calve's skin on those recreant limbs.
Shaksp.

56. To FALL out. To quarrel; to jar; to grow contentious.

Little needed those proofs to one who would have fallen out with herself rather than make any conjectures to Zelmane's speeches. Sidney.

How fell you out, say that?
—No contraries hold more antipathy
Than I and such a knave. Shaksp.

Meeting her of late behind the wood,
Seeking sweet favours for this hateful fool,
I did upbraid her and fall out with her. Shaksp.

The cedar, by the instigation of the loyalists, fell out with the homebians, who had elected him to be their king. Howel.

A soul exasperated in ills, falls out
With every thing, its friend, itself. Addison.

It has been my misfortune to live among quarrelsome neighbours: there is but one thing can make us fall out, and that is the inheritance of lord Strut's estate. Arbuthnot.

57. To FALL out. To happen; to befall.

Who think you is my Dorus fallen out to be?
Sidney.

Now, for the most part, it so falleth out, touching things which generally are received, that although in themselves they be most certain, yet, because men presume them granted of all, we are hardliest able to bring proof of their certainty. Hooker.

It so fell out, that certain players
We o'er-rode on the way; of those we told him.
Shaksp.

Yet so it may fall out, because their end
Is hate, not help to me. Milton.

There fell out a bloody quarrel betwixt the frogs and the mice. L'Estrange.

If it so fall out that thou art miserable for ever, thou hast no reason to be surprised, as if some unexpected thing had happened. Tillotson.

58. To FALL to. To begin eagerly to eat.

The men were fashion'd in a larger mould,
The women fit for labour, big and bold;
Gigantick hinds, as soon as work was done,
To their huge pots of boiling pulse would run:
Fall to, with eager joy, on homely food. Dryden.

59. To FALL to. To apply himself to.

They would needs fall to the practice of those virtues which they before learned. Sidney.

I know thee not, old man; fall to thy prayers:
How ill white hairs become a fool and jester?
Shaksp.

Having been brought up an idle horseboy, he will never after fall to labour; but is only made fit for the halter. Spenser.

They fell to raising money under pretence of the relief of Ireland. Clarendon.

My lady falls to play; so bad her chance,
He must repair it. Pope.

60. To FALL under. To be subject to; to become the subject of.

We know the effects of heat will be such as will scarce fall under the conceit of man, if the force of it be altogether kept in. Bacon.

Those things which are wholly in the choice of another, fall under our deliberation. Taylor.

The idea of the painter and the sculptor is undoubtedly that perfect and excellent example of the mind, by imitation of which imagined form, all things are represented which fall under human sight. Dryden.

61. To FALL under. To be ranged with; to be reckoned with.

No rules that relate to pastoral can affect the georgicks, which fall under that class of poetry which consists in giving plain instructions to the reader. Addison.

62. To FALL upon. To attack; to invade; to assault.

Auria falling upon these gallies, had with them a cruel and deadly fight. Knolles.

An infection in a town first falls upon children, weak constitutions, or those that are subject to other diseases: but spreading further, seizes upon the most healthy. Temple.

Man falls upon every thing that comes in his way; not a berry or mushroom can escape him. Addison.

To get rid of fools and scoundrels was one part of my design in falling upon these authors. Pope.

63. To FALL upon. To attempt.

I do not intend to fall upon nice philosophical disquisitions about the nature of time. Holder.

64. To FALL upon. To rush against.

At the same time that the storm bears upon the whole species, we are falling foul upon one another. Addison.

65. FALL is one of those general words of which it is very difficult to ascertain or detail the full signification. It retains in most of its senses some part of its primitive meaning, and implies either literally or figuratively descent, violence, or suddenness. In many of its senses it is opposed to rise; but in others has no counterpart or correlative.

To FALL, fâll. v. a.

1. To drop; to let fall.

To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword, despair and die. Shak.

If that the earth could teem with woman's tears,
Each drop, she falls, would prove a crocodile.
Shaksp.

Draw together;
And when I rear my hand, do you the like,
To fall it on Gonzalo. Shaksp.

I am willing to fall this argument; 'tis free for every man to write or not to write in verse, as he thinks it is or is not his talent, or as he imagines the audience will receive it. Dryden.

2. To sink; to depress: the contrary to raise

If a man would endeavour to raise or fall his voice still by half notes, like the stops of a lute, or by whole notes alone without halfs, as far as an eight, he will not be able to frame his voice unto it. Bacon.

3. To diminish; to let sink: opposed to raise.

Upon lessening interest to four per cent. you fall the price of your native commodities, or lessen your trade, or else prevent not the high use. Locke.

4. To yean; to bring forth.

They then conceiving, did in yeaning time
Fall party-coloured lambs and those were Jacob's.
Shaksp.

FALL, fâll. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of dropping from on high.

High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast.
Dryden.

2. The act of tumbling from an erect posture.

I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again, and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again, and caught it again; or whether his fall enraged him, or how it was, he did so set his teeth, and did tear it. Shaksp.

3. The violence suffered in dropping from on high.

My son coming in to his marriage chamber, happened to have a fall, and died. 2 Esdras.

Spirit of wine, mingled with common water, if the first fall be broken, by means of a sop, or otherwise, stayeth above; and if once mingled, it severeth not again, as oil doth. Bacon.

A fever or fall may take away my reason. Locke.

Some were hurt by the falls they got by leaping upon the ground. Gulliver.

4. Death; overthrow; destruction incurred.

Wail his fall,
Whom I myself struck down. Shaksp.

Our fathers were given to the sword, and for a spoil, and had a great fall before our enemies. Judith.

I will begin to pray for myself and for them; for I see the falls of us that dwell in the land. 2 Esdras.

5. Ruin; dissolution.

Paul's, the late theme of such a muse, whose flight
Has bravely reach'd and soar'd above thy height;
Now shalt thou stand, though sword, or time, or fire,
Or zeal more fierce than they, thy fall conspire
Denham.

6. Downfal; loss of greatness; declension from eminence; degradation; state of being deposed from a high station; plunge from happiness or greatness into misery or meanness, or from virtue to corruption. In a sense like this we say the fall of man, and the fall of angels.

Her memory served as an accuser of her change, and her own handwriting was there to bear testimony against her fall. Sidney.

Perhaps thou talk'st of me, and do'st enquire
Of my restraint: why here I live alone:
And pitiest this my miserable fall. Daniel.

He, careless now of int'rest, fame, or fate,
Perhaps forgets that Oxford e'er was great;
Or deeming meanest what we greatest call,
Beholds thee glorious only in thy fall. Pope.

7. Declension of greatness, power, or dominion.

Till the empire came to be settled in Charles the great, the fall of the Romans' huge dominion concurring with other universal evils, caused those times to be days of much affliction and trouble throughout the world. Hooker.

8. Diminution; decrease of value.

That the improvement of Ireland is the principal cause why our lands in purchase rise not, as naturally they should, with the fall of our interest, appears evidently from the effect the fall of interest hath had upon houses in London. Child.

9. Declination or diminution of sound; cadence; close of musick.

That strain again; it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet South
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing and giving odours. Shaksp.

How sweetly did they float upon the wings
Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night,
At ev'ry fall smoothing the raven-down
Of darkness till it smil'd! Milton.

10. Declivity; steep descent.

Waters, when beat upon the shore, or straitned, as the falls of bridges, or dashed against themselves by winds, give a roaring noise. Bacon.

11. Cataract; cascade; rush of water down a steep place.

There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals. Shaksp.

A whistling wind, or a melodious noise of birds among the spreading branches, or a pleasing fall of water running violently, these things made them to swoon for fear. Wisdom.

Down through the crannies of the living walls
The crystal streams descend in murm'ring falls.
Dryden.

The swain, in barren deserts, with surprize
Sees lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise;
And starts amid the thirsty wilds to hear
New falls of water murm'ring in his ear. Pope.

Now under hanging mountains,
Beside the falls of fountains,
He makes his moan;
And calls her ghost,
For ever, ever, ever lost! Pope's St. Cecilia.

12. The outlet of a current into any other water.

Before the fall of the Po into the gulph, it receives into its channel considerable rivers. Addison.

13. Autumn; the fall of the leaf; the time when the leaves drop from the trees.

What crowds of patients the town doctor kills,
Or how last fall he rais'd the weekly bills. Dryd.

14. Any thing that comes down in great quantities.

Upon a great fall of rain the current carried away a huge heap of apples. L'Estrange.

15. The act of felling or cutting down: as the fall of timber.

FALLA'CIOUS, fâl-lâ'shûs.[314] adj. [fallax, Lat. fallacieux, French.]

1. Producing mistake; sophistical. It is never used of men, but of writings, propositions, or things.

The Jews believed and assented to things neither evident nor certain, nor yet so much as probable, but actually false and fallacious; such as the absurd doctrines and stories of their rabbies. South.

2. Deceitful; mocking expectation.

The force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapour bland
About their spirits had play'd, and in inmost pow'rs
Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton.

False philosophy inspires
Fallacious hope. Milton.

FALLA'CIOUSLY, fâl-lâ'shûs-lê. adv. [from fallacious.] Sophistically; with purpose to deceive; with unsound reasoning.

We shall so far encourage contradiction, as to promise not to oppose any pen that shall fallaciously refute us. Brown.

We have seen how fallaciously the author has stated the case, by supposing that nothing but unlimited mercy, or unlimited punishment, are the methods that can be made use of. Addison.

FALLA'CIOUSNESS, fâl-lâ'shûs-nês. n. s. [from fallacious.] Tendency to deceive; inconclusiveness.

FA'LLACY, fâl'lâ-sê. n. s. [fallacia, Latin; fallace, Fr.] Sophism; logical artifice; deceitful argument; delusory mode of ratiocination.

Most princes make themselves another thing from the people by a fallacy of argument, thinking themselves most kings when the subject is most basely subjected. Sidney.

Until I know this sure uncertainty,
I'll entertain the favour'd fallacy. Shakspeare.

It were a mere fallacy, and mistaking to ascribe that to the force of imagination upon another body, which is but the force of imagination upon the proper body. Bacon.

All men, who can see an inch before them, may easily detect gross fallacies. Dryden.

FALLIBI'LITY, fâl-lê-bîl'ê-tê. n. s. [from fallible.] Liableness to be deceived; uncertainty; possibility of errour.

There is a great deal of fallibility in the testimony of men; yet some things we may be almost as certain of, as that the sun shines, or that five twenties make an hundred. Watts.

FA'LLIBLE, fâl'lê-bl.[405] adj. [fallo, Lat.] Liable to errour; such as may be deceived.

Do not falsify your resolution with hopes that are fallible: to-morrow you must die. Shakspeare.

He that creates to himself thousands of little hopes, uncertain in the promise, fallible in the event, and depending upon a thousand circumstances, often fail his expectations. Taylor.

Our intellectual or rational powers need some assistance, because they are so frail and fallible in the present state. Watts.

FA'LLING, fâl'lîng. } n. s. [from
FA'LLING-in, fâl'lîng-în. } fall.] Indenting, opposed to prominence.

It shews the nose and eyebrows, with the several prominences and fallings in of the features, much more distinctly than any other kind of figure
Addison on Medals.

FA'LLINGSICKNESS, fâl-lîng-sîk'nês. n. s. [fall and sickness.] The epilepsy; a disease in which the patient is without any warning deprived at once of his senses, and falls down.

Did Cæsar swoon?—He fell down in the marketplace, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless.—He hath the falling sickness. Shakspeare.

The dog-fisher is good against the falling-sickness. Walton.

FA'LLOW, fâl'lô. adj. [palepe, Saxon.]

1. Pale red, or pale yellow.

How does your fallow greyhound, sir?
I heard say, he was out-run at Cotsale. Shaksp.

The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, had a great desire to make a great park for red as well as fallow deer between Richmond and Hampton-court. Clarendon.

2. Unsowed; left to rest after the years of tillage. [Supposed to be so called from the colour of naked ground.]

The ridges of the fallow field lay traversed, so as the English must cross them in presenting the charge. Hayward.

3. Plowed, but not sowed; plowed as prepared for a second aration.

Her predecessors, in their course of government, did but sometimes cast up the ground; and so leaving it fallow, it became quickly overgrown with weeds. Howel's Vocal Forest.

4. Unplowed; uncultivated.

Her fallow lees
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon. Shakspeare's Henry V.

5. Unoccupied; neglected.

Shall saints in civil bloodshed wallow
Of saints, and let the cause lie fallow? Hudibras.

FA'LLOW, fâl'lô.[327] n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Ground plowed in order to be plowed again

The plowing of fallows is a benefit to land. Mortimer.

The best ploughs to plow up summer fallow with. Mortimer.

2. Ground lying at rest.

Within an ancient forest's ample verge,
There stands a lonely but a healthful dwelling,
Built for convenience, and the use of life;
Around it fallows, meads, and pastures fair,
A little garden, and a limpid brook,
By nature's own contrivance seems dispos'd.
Rowe's Jane Shore.

To FA'LLOW, fâl'lô. v. n. To plow in order to a second plowing.

Begin to plow up fallows: the first fallowing ought to be very shallow. Mortimer.

FA'LLOWNESS, fâl'lô-nês. n. s. [from fallow.] Barrenness; an exemption from bearing fruit.

Like one, who, in her third widowhood, doth profess
Herself a nun, ty'd to retiredness,
S' affects my muse now a chaste fallowness. Donne.

FALSE, fâlse. adj. [falsus, Lat. faux, fausse, French.]

1. Not morally true; expressing that which is not thought.

Innocence shall make
False accusation blush, and tyranny
Tremble at patience. Shakspeare.

There are false witnesses among men
L'Estrange.

2. Not physically true; conceiving that which does not exist.

For how can that be false, which ev'ry tongue
Of ev'ry mortal man affirms for true?
Which truth hath in all ages been so strong,
As loadstone like, all hearts it ever drew. Davies.

A farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and action of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsisting with the characters of mankind. Dryden.

3. Succedaneous; suppositious.

Take a vessel and make a false bottom of coarse canvas: fill it with earth above the canvas. Bacon.

4. Deceiving expectation; not solid; not sound.

He fell, as a huge rocky cliff,
Whose false foundation waves have wash'd away,
With dreadful poise is from the main land reft.
Fairy Queen.

When that flood in its own depths was drown'd,
It left behind it false and slipp'ry ground. Dryden.

The heart of man looks fair, but when we come to lay any weight upon 't, the ground is false under us. L'Estrange.

5. Not agreeable to rule or propriety.

Now, fy upon my false French; by mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate. Shaksp.

6. Not honest; not just.

The true prince may, for recreation, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the times want countenance. Shakspeare.

Men are sponges, which, to pour out, receive;
Who know false play, rather than lose, deceive.
Donne.

7. Treacherous; perfidious; traiterous; deceitful; hollow.

I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of ev'ry sin,
That has a name. Shakspeare.

False of heart, light of fear, bloody of hand. Shak.

A man to whom he had committed the trust of his person, in making him his chamberlain; this man, no ways disgraced, no ways discontent, no ways put in fear, turns false unto him. Bacon.

So hast thou cheated Theseus with a wile,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name; as false to me,
So false thou art to him who set thee free. Dryden.

The ladies will make a numerous party against him, for being false to love in forsaking Dido. Dryden's Virgil.

8. Counterfeit; hypocritical; not real: as, a false diamond.

False tears true pity moves: the king commands
To loose his fetters. Dryden's Æneid.

9. In all these senses true is the word opposed.

FALSE, fâlse. adv. Not truly; not honestly; not exactly; falsely.

What thou would'st highly,
That thou would'st holily; would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly win. Shakspeare.

To FALSE, fâlse. v. a. [from the noun.] This word is now out of use.

1. To violate by failure of veracity.

It's not enough that to this lady mild,
Thou falsed hath thy faith with perjury? Fairy Q.

2. To deceive.

Fair seemly pleasance each to other makes,
With goodly purposes there as they sit;
And in his falsed fancy he her takes
To be the fairest wight that lived yet. F. Queen.

3. To defeat; to balk; to evade.

But, Guyon, in the heat of all his strife,
Was wary wise, and closely did await
Advantage, whilst his foe did rage most rife;
Sometimes athwart, sometimes he struck him strait,
And falsed oft his blows t' illude him with such bait. Fairy Queen.

FALSEHEA'RTED, fâlse-hârt'ĕd. adj. [false and heart.] Treacherous; perfidious; deceitful; hollow.

The traiterous or treacherous, who have misled others, are severely punished: and the neutrals and falsehearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, he noted. Bacon.

FA'LSEHOOD, fâlse'hûd. n. s. [from false.]

1. Want of truth; want of veracity.

Artificer of fraud; he was the first
That practised falsehood under saintly show. Milton.

All deception in the course of life is, indeed, nothing else but a lie reduced to practice, and falsehood passing from words to things. South.

2. Want of honesty; treachery; deceitfulness; perfidy.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape
Like his, and colour serpentine may show
Thy inward fraud, to warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth; lest that too heav'nly form, pretended
To hellish falshood, snare them. Milton.

3. A lie; a false assertion.

In your answers there remains falshood. Job.

4. Counterfeit; imposture.

For no falshood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness. Milton.

FA'LSELY, fâlse'lĕ. adv. [from false.]

1. Contrarily to truth; not truly.

Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing proselytes and religion. Government of the Tongue.

Already were the Belgians on our coast,
Whose fleet more mighty every day became
By late success, which they did falsely boast,
And now by first appearing seem'd to claim.
Dryden's Ann. Mir.

Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,
And yet he falsely said he was in love;
Falsely; for had he truly lov'd, at least
He would have giv'n one day to my request.
Dryden's Aureng.

Such as are treated ill, and upbraided falsely, find out an intimate friend that will hear their complaints, and endeavour to sooth their secret resentments. Addison's Spectator.

2. Erroneously; by mistake.

He knows that to be inconvenient which we falsely think convenient for us. Smalridge.

3. Perfidiously; treacherously; deceitfully.

FA'LSENESS, fâlse'nĕs. n. s. [from false.]

1. Contrariety to truth.

2. Want of veracity; violation of promise.

Suppose the reverse of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud and rapine, and perjury and falseness to a man's word, and all vice were established by law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature? Tillotson.

3. Duplicity; deceit; double dealing.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all falseness or foulness of intentions, especially to personated devotion. Hammond.

4. Treachery; perfidy; traitorousness.

King Richard might create a perfect guess,
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness.
Shakspeare's Henry IV.

The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the falseness, or cheated by the avarice of such a servant. Rogers.

FA'LSER, fâl'sûr. n. s. [from false.] A deceiver; a hypocrite. Obsolete.

Such end had the kid, for he would weaned be
Of craft coloured with simplicity;
And such end, pardie, does them all remain,
That of such falser's friendship been fain. Spenser.

FALSIFI'ABLE, fâl-sĕ-fi'â-bl.[183] adj. [from falsify.] Liable to be counterfeited or corrupted.

FALSIFICA'TION, fâl-sĕ-fĕ-kâ'shûn. n. s. [falsification, French; from falsify.]

1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.

Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, wittingly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous. Hooker.

To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits divine honour. Bacon.

2. Confutation.

The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this isle, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification. Broome.

FA'LSIFIER, fâl'sĕ-fi-ûr. n. s. [from falsify.]

1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.

It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs. Boyle.

2. A liar; one that contrives falsehoods.

Boasters are naturally falsifiers; and the people, of all others, that put their shams the worst together. L'Estrange.

To FA'LSIFY, fâl'sĕ-fi. v. a. [falsifier, Fr.]

1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for that which in reality it is not.

We cannot excuse that church, which through corrupt translations of scripture, delivereth, instead of divine speeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falsified additions, proposeth that to the people of God as scripture, which is in truth no scripture. Hooker.

The Irish bards used to forge and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man. Spenser on Ireland.

Falsifying the balance by deceit. Amos.

2. To confute; to prove false.

Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish œconomy, when Jews and pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction. Addison.

3. To violate; to break by falsehood.

It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled. Sidney.

He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself, mistrusting nothing less than the falsehood of the pirate. Knolles' History.

This superadds treachery to all the other pestilent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important trust. Decay of Piety.

4. To pierce; to run through.

His crest is rash'd away, his ample shield
Is falsified, and round with jav'lins fill'd. Dryden.

Of this word Mr. Dryden writes thus: My friends quarrelled at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confessed; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there: why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, si græco fonte cadant, especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I used the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, makes my meaning plain:

Ma si l' Usbergo d' Ambi era perfetto,
Che mai poter falsarlo in nessum canto.
Ariosto, cant. XXVI.

Falsar cannot otherwise be turned than by falsified: for his shield was falsed, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins. Dryden.

Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalize the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.

To FA'LSIFY, fål'sė-fi.[183] v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.

This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify. South.

FA'LSITY, fål'sė-tė. n. s. [falsitas, Latin.]

1. Falsehood; contrariety to truth.

Neither are they able to break through those errours wherein they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hooker.

Can you on him such falsities obtrude?
And as a mortal the most wise delude? Sandys.

Probability does not make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding. South.

2. A lie; an errour; a false assertion or position.

That Danubius arises from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the north, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the restorer of Epicurus, and all easily confutable falsities.
Glanville's Scepsis.

To FA'LTER, fål'tûr. v. n. [faltar, to be wanting, Spanish; vaultur, a stammerer, Islandick, which is probably a word from the same radical.]

1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.

With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein,
Tell on, quoth she. Fairy Queen.

The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd;
The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue. Dryd.

He changes gods, and falters at the question:
His fears, his words, his looks declare him guilty.
Smith.

2. To fail in any act of the body.

This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king
Shall falter under foul rebellious arms. Shaksp.

He found his legs falter. Wiseman's Surgery.

3. To fail in any act of the understanding.

How far idiots are concerned in the want or weakness of any or all faculties, an exact observation of their several ways of faltering would discover. Locke.

To FA'LTER, fål'tûr. v. a. To sift; to cleanse. This word seems to be merely rustick or provincial.

Barley for malt must be bold, dry, sweet, and clean faltered from foulness, seeds, and oats.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

FA'LTERINGLY, fål'tûr-ing-lė. adv. [from falter.] With hesitation; with difficulty; with feebleness.

To FA'MBLE, fåm'bl. v. n. [famler, Dan.] To hesitate in speech. This word I find only in Skinner.

FAME, fåme. n. s. [fama, Lat. φάμα.]

1. Celebrity; renown.

The house to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory through out all countries. Chronicles.

The desire of fame will not suffer endowments to lie useless. Addison.

What is this fame for which we thoughts employ,
The owner's wife which other men enjoy? Pope.

2. Report; rumour.

We have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt. Joshua.

I shall shew what are true fames. Bacon.

FA'MED, fåmd.[359] adj. [from fame.] Renowned; celebrated; much talked of.

He is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer.
Shaksp.

He purposes to seek the Clarian god,
Avoiding Delphos, his more fam'd abode,
Since Phlegian robbers made unsafe the road.
Dryden.

Aristides was an Athenian philosopher, famed for his learning and wisdom; but converted to christianity. Addison.

FA'MELESS, fåme'lės. adj. [from fame.] Having no fame; without renown. Not in use.

Then let me, fameless, love the fields and woods,
The fruitful water'd vales and running floods.
May's Virgil.

FAMI'LIAR, fâ-mîl'yâr.[113] adj. [familiaris, Lat.]

1. Domestick; relating to a family.

They range familiar to the dome. Pope.

2. Affable; not formal; easy in conversation.

Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar.
Shakspeare.

Be not too familiar with Poins; for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Shaksp.

3. Unceremonious; free, as among persons long acquainted.

Kalandar streight thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken. Sidney.

4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom.

I see not how the scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened. Hooker.

Let us chuse such noble counsel,
That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shaksp.

Our sweet
Recess and only consolation left
Familiar to our eyes! Milton.

One idea which is familiar to the mind, connected with others which are new and strange, will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance.
Watts

5. Well acquainted with; accustomed; habituated by custom.

Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd
In temper and in nature, will receive
Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain. Milton.

The senses at first let in particular ideas; and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar with some of them, they are lodged in the memory, and names got to them. Locke.

He was amazed how so impotent and groveling an insect as I, could entertain such inhuman ideas, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear wholly unmoved at all the scenes of blood and desolation.
Gulliver's Travels.

Patient permit the sadly-pleasing strain,
Familiar now with grief, your tears refrain. Pope.

6. Common; frequent.

To a wrong hypothesis may be reduced the errours that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood: there is nothing more familiar than this. Locke.

7. Easy; unconstrained.

He unreins
His muse, and sports in loose familiar strains.
Addison.

8. Too nearly acquainted.

A poor man found a priest familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad, and could not prove it, the priest sued him for defamation.
Camden.

FAMI'LIAR, fâ-mîl'yâr. n. s.

1. An intimate; one long acquainted.

The king is a noble gentleman, and my familiar.
Shaksp.

When he finds himself avoided and neglected by his familiars, this affects him. Rogers.

2. A demon supposed to attend at call.

Love is a familiar; there is no evil angel but love. Shaksp.

FAMILIA'RITY, fâ-mîl-yė-âr'ė-tė. n. s. [familiarité, Fr. from familiar.]

1. Easiness of conversation; omission of ceremony; affability.

2. Acquaintance; habitude.

We contract at last such an intimacy and familiarity with them, as makes it difficult and irksome for us to call off our minds. Atterbury.

3. Easy intercourse.

They say any mortal may enjoy the most intimate familiarities with these gentle spirits. Pope.

To FAMILIARI'ZE, fâ-mîl'yâr-ize. v. a. [familiariser, French.]

1. To make familiar; to make easy by habitude; to make common.

2. To bring down from a state of distant superiority.

The genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all fear and apprehensions. Addison.

FAMI'LIARLY, fâ-mîl'yâr-lė. adv. [from familiar.]

1. Unceremoniously; with freedom like that of long acquaintance.

Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Your sauciness will jest upon my love. Shaksp.

He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the tiltyard, and then he broke his head. Shaksp.

The governour came to us, and, after salutations, said familiarly, that he was come to visit us, and called for a chair and sat him down. Bacon.

2. Commonly; frequently; with the unconcernedness or easiness of long custom.

Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long a darkness, do familiarly present our senses with as great alterations in the sun and moon. Raleigh.

3. Easily; without solemnity; without formality.

Horace still charms with graceful negligence,
And without method talks us into sense;
Will, like a friend, familiarly convey
The truest notions in the easiest way. Pope.

FAMI'LLE, fâ-mêêl'. [en famille, Fr.] In a family way; domestically.

Deluded mortals, whom the great
Chuse for companions tete-a-tete;
Who at their dinners, en famille,
Get leave to sit whene'er you will. Swift.

FA'MILY, fâm'ė-lė. n. s. [familia, Latin; famille, French.]

1. Those who live in the same house; household.

The night made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my whole family; for my wife prevailed on me to take somewhat. Swift.

2. Those that descend from one common progenitor; a race; a tribe; a generation.

Of Gershon was the family of the Libnites.
Numbers.

3. A course of descent; a genealogy.

If thy ancient but ignoble blood

Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood,
Go and complain thy family is young,
Nor own thy fathers have been fools so long. Pope.

4. A class; a tribe; a species.

There be two great families of things, sulphureous and mercurial, inflammable and not inflammable, mature and crude, oily and watery. Bacon.

FA'MINE, fâm'în.[140] n. s. [famine, French; fames, Lat.] Scarcity of food; dearth; distress for want of victuals.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie,
'Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shaksp.

Famines have not been of late observed, partly because of the industry of mankind, partly by those supplies that come by sea, but principally by the goodness of God. Hale.

This city never felt a siege before,
But from the lake receiv'd its daily store;
Which now shut up, and millions crowded here,
Famine will soon in multitudes appear. Dryden.

To FA'MISH, fâm'ish. v. a. [from fames, Lat. famis, old Fr.]

1. To kill with hunger; to starve; to destroy by want of food.

What, did he marry me to famish me? Shaksp.
The pains of famish'd Tantalus he 'll feel,
And Sisyphus, that labours up the hill
The rowling rock in vain; and curst Ixion's wheel. Dryden.

2. To kill by deprivation or denial of any thing necessary to life. Milton uses it with of.

Thin air
Above the clouds will pine his entrails gross,
And famish him of breath if not of bread. Milton.

To FA'MISH, fâm'ish. v. n. To die of hunger; to suffer extreme hunger.

You are all resolved rather to die than to famish. Shaksp.

FA'MISHMENT, fâm'ish-mênt. n. s. [from famish.] The pain of hunger; want of food.

Apicius thou did'st on thy gut bestow
Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent,
Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,
In poison'd potion drank'st. Hakewill.

FAMO'SITY, fâ-mŏs'ê-tê. n. s. [from famous.] Renown; celebrity. Dict.

FA'MOUS, fâ'mûs.[314] adj. [fameux, Fr. famosus, Lat.]

1. Renowned; celebrated; much talked of and praised.

Henry the fifth, too famous to live long;
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth. Shakspeare.

There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown. Numbers.

She became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her. Ezekiel.

Pyreius was only famous for counterfeiting all base things; as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears, and swine tumbling in the mire; whereupon he was surnamed Rupographus. Peacham.

I shall be named among the famousest
Of women, sung at solemn festivals. Milton.

Many, besides myself, have heard our famous Waller own, that he derived the harmony of his numbers from the Godfrey of Bulloign, turn'd into English by Fairfax. Dryden.

2. It has sometimes a middle signification, and imports fame whether for good or ill.

Menecrates and Menas, famous pyrates,
Make the sea serve them. Shaksp.

FA'MOUSLY, fâ'mûs-lê. adv. [from famous.] With great renown; with great celebration.

Then this land was famously enrich'd
With politick grave counsel; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace. Shaksp.

They looked on the particulars as things famously spoken of and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read. Grew.

FA'MOUSNESS, fâ'mûs-nês. n. s. [from famous.] Celebrity; great fame.

FAN, fân. n. s. [vannus, Latin.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With scarfs, and fans, and double change of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, with all this knav'ry. Shaksp.

Flavia, the least and slightest toy
Can with resistless art employ:
In other hands the fan would prove
An engine of small force in love;
But she, with such an air and mien,
Not to be told or safely seen,
Directs its wanton motion so,
That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;
Gives coolness to the matchless dame,
To every other breast a flame. Atterbury.

The modest fan was lifted up no more,
And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before. Pope.

2. Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to shew him such a fan of feathers. L'Estrange.

3. The instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed. [van, French.]

Flail, strawfork, and rake, with a fan that is strong. Tusser.

Asses shall eat clean provender, winnowed with the shovel and with the fan. Isaiah.

In the wind and tempest of fortune's frown,
Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shaksp.

For the cleansing of corn is commonly used either a wicker fan, or a fan with sails. Mortimer.

4. Any thing by which the air is moved; wings.

The pris'ner, with a spring from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.

5. An instrument to raise the fire.

Nature worketh in us all a love to our own counsels: the contradiction of others is a fan to inflame that love. Hooker.

To FAN, fân. v. a.

1. To cool or recreate with a fan.

She was fanned into slumbers by her slaves. Spectator.

2. To ventilate; to affect by air put in motion.

Let every feeble humour shake your hearts;
Your enemies with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair. Shaksp.

The Norweyan banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shaksp.

The air
Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:
From branch to branch the smaller birds with song
Solac'd the woods, and spread their painted wings,
Till ev'n. Milton.

The fanning wind upon her bosom blows;
To meet the fanning wind the bosom rose:
The fanning wind and purling streams continue her repose. Dryden.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,
And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted up our loves. Dryden.

And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Pants on her neck, and fans her parting hair. Pope.

3. To separate, as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, not omitting any. Bacon.

Not so the wicked; but as chaff, which fann'd,
The wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand
In judgment. Milton.

FANA'TICISM, fâ-nât'ê-sîzm. n. s. [from fanatick.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; has triumphed over all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their slanders and calumnies. Rogers.

FANA'TICK, fâ-nât'îk.[509] adj. [fanaticus, Latin; fanatique, French.] Enthusiastick; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and sorceries abus'd
Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek
Their wand'ring gods, disguis'd in brutish forms. Milton.

FANA'TICK, fâ-nât'îk. n. s. [from the adjective.] An enthusiast; a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double armature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine, than the tumultuary weapon snatcht up by a fanatick. Decay of Piety.

FA'NCIFUL, fân'sê-fûl. adj. [fancy and full.]

1. Imaginative; rather guided by imagination than reason: of persons.

Some fanciful men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented. Woodward.

2. Dictated by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images: of things.

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings: and how foolish and fanciful were they? Hayward.

It would shew as much singularity to deny this, as it does a fanciful facility to affirm it. Garth.

FA'NCIFULLY, fân'sê-fûl-ê. adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

FA'NCIFULNESS, fân'sê-fûl-nês. n. s. [from fanciful.] Addiction to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fancifulness towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations. Hale.

FA'NCY, fân'sê. n. s. [contracted from phantasy, phantasia, Lat. φαντασια. It should be phansy.]

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Shakspeare, fancy's sweetest child!
Warble his native wood-notes wild. Milton.

In the soul
Are many lesser faculties, that serve
Reason as chief: among these fancy next
Her office holds; of all external things,
Which the five watchful senses represent,
She forms imaginations, airy shapes,

Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames
All what we affirm, or what deny, and call
Our knowledge, or opinion. Milton.

Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence which gives as full satisfaction, and as clear a conviction to our reason. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,
From hope to fear, from joy to doubt:
Whom we now a goddess call,
Divinely grac'd in every feature,
Strait 's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature:
Love and hate are fancy all. Granville.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Men's private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hooker.

A person of a full and ample fortune who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion. Clarendon.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

3. Taste; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. Addison.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;
Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died
With them they think on? Shaksp.

5. Inclination; liking; fondness.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling. L'Estr.

For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself,
To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
To death, or to a vow of single life. Shaksp.

A resemblance of humour and opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is a ground of affection. Collier.

6. In Shakspeare it signifies love.

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourished?
It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fed, and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies. Shaksp.

7. Caprice; humour; whim.

True worth shall gain me, that it may be said
Desert, not fancy, once a woman led. Dryden.

The sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river. Arbuthnot.

One that was just entering upon a long journey, took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury. L'Estrange.

8. False notion.

The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatical, or medicinal substance, are but fancies: the cause is, for that those things have passed their period, and nourish not. Bacon.

9. Something that pleases or entertains without real use or value.

London-pride is a pretty fancy for borders. Mortimer.

To FA'NCY, fân'sè. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so: all are always obliged to love its true friends, and pray for its very enemies. Strutt's Sermons.

If our search has reached no farther than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginations furnish us with. Locke.

To FA'NCY, fân'sè. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.

But he whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretched pinions soars above the crowd;
Who mighty thought can clothe with manly dress,
He whom I fancy, but can ne'er express. Dryden.

2. To like; to be pleased with.

Ninus both admiring her judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband. Raleigh.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish this town in whatever manner she pleaseth to fancy. Swift.

FA'NCYMONGER, fân'sè-mûng-gûr. n. s. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forests, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him. Shakspeare.

FA'NCYSICK, fân'sè-sîk. adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unsound; one whose distemper is in his own mind.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable, and when we come to be fancysick, there's no cure. L'Estrange.

FAND, fând, for found. It is retained in Scotland.

This when as true by tryal he out fand,
He bade to open wide his brazen gate. Spenser.

FANE, fâne. n. s. [fane, French; fanum, Lat.] A temple; a place consecrated to religion. A poetical word.

Nor fane nor capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarments all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege! Shakspeare.

Old Calibe, who kept the sacred fane
Of Juno, now she seem'd. Dryden.

Yet some to fanes repair'd, and humble rites
Perform'd to Thor and Woden, fabled gods
Who with their vot'ries in one ruin shar'd. Philips.

A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,
Hewn from the Theban mountain's rocky womb. Tickel.

The fields are ravish'd from the industrious swains,
From men their cities, and from gods their fanes. Pope.

FA'NFARON, fân'fâ-rôn. n. s. [French, from the Spanish. Originally in Arabick it signifies one who promises what he cannot perform. Menage.]

1. A bully; a hector.

Virgil makes Æneas a bold avower of his own virtues, which, in the civility of our poets, is the character of a fanfaron or hector. Dryden.

2. A blusterer; a boaster of more than he can perform.

There are fanfarons in the trials of wit too, as well as in feats of arms; and none so forward to engage in argument or discourse as those that are least able to go through with it. L' Estrange.

FANFARONA'DE, fân-fâr-ò-nâde'. n. s. [from fanfaron, French.] A bluster; a tumour of fictitious dignity.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fanfaronade of monsieur Bouffleurs. Swift.

To FANG, fâng. v. a. [fangan, Saxon; vangen, Dutch.] To seize; to gripe; to clutch. To vang is yet used in Devonshire.

Destruction fang mankind! Shakspeare.

FANG, fâng. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal by which the prey is seized and held; any thing like them.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind,
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n till I shrink with cold, I smile and say
This is no flattery. Shakspeare.

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs or tusks; as boars, pikes, salmons, and dogs, though less. Bacon.

Prepar'd to fly,
The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk, unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain. Dryden.

Then charge, provoke the lion to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and stooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Addison.

2. The nails; the talons.

3. Any shoot or other thing by which hold is taken.

The protuberant fangs of the yuca are to be treated like the tuberoses. Evelyn.

FA'NGED, fângd.[359] adj. [from fang.] Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs.

My two school fellows,
Whom I will trust as I will adders fang'd,
They bear the mandate. Shakspeare.

Not Scythians, nor fierce Dacians, onward rush
With half the speed, nor half so swift retreat:
In chariots, fang'd with scythes, they scour the field,
Drive through our wedg'd battalions with a whirl,
And strew a dreadful harvest on the plain. Philips.

FA'NGLE, fâng'gl.[405] n. s. [from fangan, Saxon, to attempt. Skinner.] Silly attempt; trifling scheme. It is never used, or rarely, but in contempt with the epithet new: as, new fangles, new fangleness.

FA'NGLED, fâng'gl'd.[359] adj. [from fangle.] This word seems to signify gawdy; ridiculously showy; vainly decorated: new fangled, is therefore new-fashioned; dressed out in new decorations.

Quick wits be in desire new fangled, and in purpose unconstant. Ascham.

A book! oh, rare one!
Be not, as in this fangled world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers. Shakspeare.

FA'NGLESS, fâng'lês. adj. [from fang.] Toothless; without teeth.

The king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his pow'r, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold. Shakspeare.

FA'NGOT, fâng'gôt. n. s. A quantity of wares: as raw silk, &c. containing from one to two hundred weight three quarters. Dict.

FA'NNEL, fân'nêl. n. s. [fanon, French.] A sort of ornament like a scarf, worn about the left arm of a mass-priest when he officiates. Dict.

I will send unto Babylon fanners that shall fan her. Jeremiah.

FA'NTASIED, fân'tâ-sîd.[283] adj. [from fan- tasy.] Filled with fancies or imaginations.

As I travell'd hither through the land,
I found the people strangely fantasied. Shaks.

FA'NTASM, fân'tâzm. n. s. [See PHANTASM.] A thing not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FANTA'STICAL, fân-tâs'tê-kâl. } adj. [fantastique, Fr. from fantasy.]
FANTA'STICK, fân-tâs'tik.[509] }

1. Irrational; bred only in the imagination.

The delight that a man takes from another's sin, can be nothing else but a fantastical, preternatural complacency, arising from that which he really has no feeling of. South.

2. Subsisting only in the fancy; imaginary.

Present feats
Are less than horrible imaginings:
My thought, whose murther yet is but fantastical
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,
But what is not. Shakspeare.

Men are so possessed with their own fancies, that they take them for oracles; and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations of truth, when indeed they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastick ideas of a busy imagination. Decay of Piety.

3. Unreal; apparent only; having the nature of phantoms which only assume visible forms occasionally.

Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye shew? Shakspeare.

4. Uncertain; unsteady; irregular.

Nor happiness can I, nor misery feel,
From any turn of her fantastick wheel. Prior.

5. Whimsical; fanciful; capricious; humorous; indulgent of one's own imagination.

They put such words in the mouths of one of these fantastical mind-infected people, that children and musicians call lovers. Sidney.

I'll knit it up in silken strings,
With twenty odd conceited true love knots:
To be fantastick, may become a youth
Of greater time than I. Shakspeare.

Duumvir is provided with an imperious, expensive, and fantastick mistress; to whom he retires from the conversation of a discreet and affectionate wife. Tatler.

We are apt to think your medallists a little fantastical in the different prices they set upon their coins, without any regard to the metal of which they are composed. Addison.

FANTA'STICALLY, fân-tâs'tê-kâl-ê. adv. [from fantastical.]

1. By the power of imagination.
2. Capriciously; humorously; unsteadily.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not. Shakspeare.

3. Whimsically; in compliance with imagination.

One cannot so much as fantastically chuse, even or odd, he thinks not why. Grew.

FANTA'STICALNESS, fân-tâs'tê-kâl-nês. }
FANTA'STICKNESS, fân-tâs'tik-nês. }
n. s. [from fantastical.]

1. Humorousness; mere compliance with fancy.
2. Whimsicalness; unreasonableness.

I dare not assume to myself to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantasticalness of it. Tillotson.

3. Caprice; unsteadiness.

FA'NTASY, fân'tâ-sê. n. s. [fantasie, French; phantasia, Latin; φαντασια.]

1. Fancy; imagination; the power of imagining. See FANCY.

How now, Horatio! you tremble and look pale!
Is not this something more than fantasy? Shaksp.

I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy:
Which is as thin of substance as the air,
And more unconstant than the wind. Shaksp.

He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies. Shaksp.

Go you, and where you find a maid,
That ere she sleep hath thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy,
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy. Shaksp.

These spirits of sense, in fantasy's high court,
Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well;
And so they send a good or ill report
Down to the heart, where all affections dwell.
Davies.

By the power of fantasy we see colours in a dream, or a mad man sees things before him which are not there. Newton.

2. Idea; image of the mind.

And with the sug'ry sweet thereof allure
Chaste ladies' ears to fantasies impure. Hubberd.

3. Humour; inclination.

I would wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the scriptures to your fantasies and affections. Whitgifte.

FA'NTOM, fân-tûm.[166] n. s. [See PHANTOM.] Something not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FAP, fâp. adj. Fuddled; drunk. It seems to have been a cant word in the time of Shakspeare.

The gentleman had drunk himself out of his five senses; and being fap, sir, was, as they say, cashiered. Shakspeare.

FAR, fâr.[77] [78] adv. [ꝼeoꝛ, Saxon; fatt, Erse.]

1. To great extent in length.

Pay sacred rev'rence to Apollo's song,
Lest wrathful the far-shooting god emit
His fatal arrows. Prior.

2. To a great extent every way. This is less proper.

Vast and great
Is what I love; the far extended ocean
To a little riv'let I prefer. Prior.

With costly cates Rome stain'd her frugal board;
Then with ill-gotten gold she bought a lord;
Corruption, discord, luxury combin'd,
Down sunk the far-fam'd mistress of mankind.
Arbuthnot.

From the same lineage stem Æetes came,
The far-fam'd brother of th' enchantress dame.
Pope.

3. To a great distance progressively.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest. Shakspeare.

Is it far you ride?
—As far my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shakspeare.

Far from that hated face the Trojans fly;
All but the fool who sought his destiny. Dryden.

4. Remotely; at a great distance.

He meant to travel into far countries, until his friends' affection either ceased or prevailed.
Sidney.

In a kingdom rightly ordered, after a law is once published, it presently takes effect far and wide; all states framing themselves thereunto. Hooker.

And after that long strayed here and there,
Through every field and forest far and near.
Hubberd.

Far be it from me to justify the cruelties used towards them, which had their reward soon after. Bacon

He sent light horsemen into Mesopotamia with a guide, because the country was unto him best known; following not far after himself with all his army. Knolles.

And yet the lights which in my tower do shine,
Mine eyes, which view all objects nigh and far,
Look not into this little world of mine. Davies.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wandering thoughts and notions vain. Milton.

I have been hunting up and down, far and near, since your unhappy indisposition, to find out a remedy. L' Estrange.

The nations far and near contend in choice,
And send the flow'r of war by publick voice.
Dryden.

The painted lizard and the birds of prey,
Foes of the frugal kind, be far away. Dryden.

But from the reading of my book and me,
Be far, ye foes of virtuous poetry!
Who fortune's fault upon the poor can throw,
Point at the tatter'd coat and ragged shoe.
Dryden.

Far off you view them with a longing eye
Upon the topmast branch. Dryden.

These words are so far from establishing any dominion, that we find quite the contrary. Locke.

'Till on the Po his blasted corps was hurl'd,
Far from his country in the western world.
Addison.

5. To a distance.

As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from him. Psalms.

Neither did those that were sent, and travelled far off, undertake so difficult enterprises without a conductor. Raleigh.

But all in vain! which when he saw, he ceas'd
Contending, and removed his tents far off. Milton.

I had always a curiosity to look back into the sources of things, and view in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world. Burnet.

A lion's hide around his loins he wore;
The well poiz'd javelin to the field he bore,
Inur'd to blood; the far destroying dart,
And the best weapon, an undaunted heart.
Addison.

6. In a great part.

When they were by Jebus the day was far spent.
Judges.

7. In a great proportion; by many degrees. It is commonly used with some word noting the comparative, but Dryden has used it absolutely.

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. Proverbs.

Such a communication passeth far better through the water than air. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Those countries have far greater rivers, and far higher mountains to pour down waters, than any part of the world. Bacon.

The face of war,
In ancient times, doth differ far
From what our fiery battles are. Waller.

Of negatives we have far the least certainty, and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved. Tillotson.

Latin is a more succinct language than the Italian, Spanish, French, or even than the English, which, by reason of its monosyllables, is far the most compendious of them. Dryden.

The field is spacious I design to sow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the plough. Dryden.

Besides, he's lovely far above the rest,
With you immortal, and with beauty blest. Pope.

Ah! hope not yet to breathe thy native air;
Far other journey first demands thy care. Pope.

8. To a great height; magnificently. This is perhaps only in Shakspeare.

I do not think
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,

Endows a man but him.
——You speak him far.
——I don't extend him, sir. Cymbeline.

9. To a certain point; to a certain degree.
The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, as it is amongst the heathen; but must be received from God himself. Hooker.
Answer them
How far forth you do like their articles. Shaksp.
Not to resolve, is to resolve: and many times it breeds as many necessities, and engageth as far in some other sort, as to resolve. Bacon.
Of this I need not many words to declare how far it is from being so much as any part of repentance. Hammond.
My discourse is so far from being equivalent to the position he mentions, that it is a perfect contradiction to it. Tillotson.
The custom of these tongues sometimes so far influences the expressions, that in these epistles one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations. Locke.

10. FAR off. At a great distance.
For though I fled him angry, yet recall'd
To life prolong'd, and promis'd race, I now
Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts
Of glory, and far off his steps adore. Milton.

11. FAR off. To a great distance.
Cherubic watch, and of a sword the flame
Wide-waving, all approach far off to fright,
And guard all passage to the tree of life. Milton.

12. Off is joined with far, when far, noting distance, is not followed by a preposition: as, I set the boat far off, I set the boat far from me.

13. FAR is used often in composition: as farshooting, farseeing.

FAR-FETCH, får-fětsh'. n. s. [far and fetch.] A deep stratagem. A ludicrous word.
But Jesuits have deeper reaches,
In all their politick farfetches;
And from their Coptick priest, Kircherus,
Found out this mystick way to jeer us. Hudibras.

FAR-FETCHED, får-fetsht'.[369] adj. [far and fetch.]

1. Brought from places remote.
Of these things others quickly will dispose,
Whose pains have earn'd the farfetch'd spoil. Milton.
By his command we boldly cross'd the line;
And bravely fought where southern stars arise:
We trac'd the farfetch'd gold unto the mine,
And that which brib'd our fathers made our prize. Dryden.

2. Studiously sought; elaborately strained; not easily or naturally introduced.
York, with all his farfetch'd policy. Shaksp.
For far-fetched rhymes make puzzled angels strain,
And in low prose dull Lucifer complain. Smith.
Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable farfetched analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the meat is green, when it is half roasted. Watts.

FAR-PIERCING, får-pêêr'sing. adj. [far and pierce.] Striking, or penetrating a great way.
Atlas, her sire, to whose farpiercing eye
The wonders of the deep expanded lie;
Th' eternal columns which on earth he rears,
End in the starry vault and prop the spheres. Pope.

FAR-SHOOTING, får-shôô'ting. adj. [far and shoot.] Shooting to a great distance.
Then loud he call'd Æneas thrice by name;
The loud repeated voice to glad Æneas came;
Great Jove, he said, and the farshooting god,
Inspire thy mind to make thy challenge good. Dryden.

FAR, får. adj.

1. Distant; remote.
A man taking a far journey. Mark.
But we must beg our bread in climes unknown,
Beneath the scorching or the freezing zone;
And some to far Oaxis shall be sold,
To try the Lybian heat, or Scythian cold. Dryden.

2. It was formerly used not only as an adverb but an adjective, with off.
These things seem small and undistinguishable,
Like far off mountains turned into clouds. Shak.
If we may behold in any creature any one spark of that eternal fire, or any far off dawning of God's glorious brightness, the same in the beauty, motion, and virtue of this light may be perceived. Raleigh.

3. From FAR. In this sense it is used elliptically for a far, or remote place.
The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth. Deuteronomy.

4. Remoter of the two; in horsemanship, the right side of the horse, which the rider turns from him when he mounts.
No true Egyptian ever knew in horses
The far side from the near. Dryden.

5. It is often not easy to distinguish whether it be an adjective or adverb: as,
The nations far and near center'd in choice. Dryden.

FAR, får. n. s. [contracted from farrow.] The offspring of a sow; young pigs.
Sows, ready to farrow at this time of the year,
Are for to be made of and counted full dear;
For now is the loss of the far of the sow
More great than the loss of two calves of the cow. Tusser.

To FARCE, fårse. v. a. [farcio, Latin; farcir, French.]

1. To stuff; to fill with mingled ingredients.
Wrestling is a pastime which either the Cornishmen derived from Corineus, their first pretended founder, or at least it ministered some stuff to the farcing of that fable. Carew.
The first principles of christian religion should not be farced with school points and private tenets. Bp. Sanderson.

2. To extend; to swell out.
'Tis not the balm, the sceptre and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The entertissu'd robe of gold and pearl,
The farced title running 'fore the king. Shaksp.

FARCE, fårse. n. s. [from the verb; or from farcer, French, to mock.] A dramatick representation written without regularity, and stuffed with wild and ludicrous conceits.
There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false: that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind; grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden.
What should be great, you turn to farce. Prior.
They object against it as a farce, because the irregularity of the plot should answer to the extravagance of the characters, which they say this piece wants, and therefore is no farce. Gay.

FA'RCICAL, får'sê-kål. adj. [from farce.] Belonging to a farce; appropriated to a farce.
They deny the characters to be farcical, because they are actually in nature. Gay.

FA'RCY, får'sê. n. s. [farcina, Italian; farcin, French.] The leprosy of horses. It is probably curable by antimony.

FA'RDEL, får'dêl. n. s. [fardello, Italian; fardeau, French.] A bundle; a little pack.
Let us to the king: there is that in this fardel will make him scratch his beard. Shaksp.
Who would fardels bear,
To groan and sweat under a weary life? Shaksp.

To FARE, fâre. v. n. [ꝼ.pan, Saxon; varen, Dutch.]

1. To go; to pass; to travel.
At last, resolving forward still to fare,
Until the blust'ring storm is overblown. F. Queen.
His spirits pure were subject to our sight,
Like to a man in shew and shape he fared. Fairfax.
So on he fares, and to the border comes
Of Eden. Milton.
Sadly they far'd along the sea-beat shore;
Still heav'd their hearts. Pope.

2. To be in any state good or bad.
So bids thee well to fare thy nether friend. Fairy Queen.
A stubborn heart shall fare evil at the last. Eccles.
Well fare the hand, which to our humble sight
Presents that beauty. Waller.
So in this throng bright Sacharissa far'd,
Oppress'd by those who strove to be her guard:
As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Foul in a tempest on their admiral. Waller.
So fares the stag among th' enraged hounds:
Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds. Denham.
But as a barque, that, in foul weather,
Toss'd by two adverse winds together,
Is bruis'd and beaten to and fro,
And knows not which to turn him to;
So far'd the knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them t' oppose. Hudibras.
If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare. L'Estrange.
Thus fares the queen, and thus her fury blows
Amidst the crowd. Dryden.
English ministers never fare so well as in a time of war with a foreign power, which diverts the private feuds and animosities of the nation. Addison.
Some are comforted that it will be a common calamity, and they shall fare no worse than their neighbours. Swift.

3. To proceed in any train of consequences good or bad.
Thus it fareth when too much desire of contradiction causes our speeches rather to pass by numbers than to stay for weight. Hooker.
So fares it when with truth falsehood contends. Milton.

4. To happen to any one well or ill: with it preceding in an impersonal form.
When the hand finds itself well warmed and covered, let it refuse the trouble of feeding the mouth, or guarding the head, 'till the body be starved or killed, and then we shall see how it will fare with the hand. South.

5. To feed; to eat; to be entertained with food.
The rich man fared sumptuously every day. Luke.
Feast your ears with the music awhile, if they will fare so harshly as on the trumpet's sound. Shaksp.
Men think they have fared hardly, if, in times of extremity, they have descended so low as to eat dogs: but Galen delivereth, that, young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations. Brown.

FARE, fâre. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Price of passage in a vehicle by land or by water. Used only of that which is paid for the person, not the goods.
He found a ship going to Tarshish; so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it to go with them unto Tarshish. Jonah.

He passage begs with unregarded pray'r,
And wants two farthings to discharge his fare.
Dryden.

2. Food prepared for the table; provisions.

But come, so well refresh'd, now let us play,
As meet is, after such delicious fare. Milton.
But when the western winds with vital pow'r
Call forth the tender grass and budding flow'r,
Then, at the last, produce in open air
Both flocks, and send them to their summer's fare.
Dryden.
This is what nature's want may well suffice;
He that would more is covetous, not wise:
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please.
Dryden.
Upon his rising up he ordered the peasant to set before him whatever food he had in his house: the peasant brought out a great deal of coarse fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily. Addison.

FAREWE'LL, { fâre'wêl or fâre-wêl'. / fâr'wêl or fâr-wêl'. } adv. [This word is originally the imperative of the verb farewell, or fare you well: sis felix, abi in bonum rem; or bene sit tibi; but in time, use familiarized it to an adverb, and it is used both by those who go and those who are left.]

1. The parting compliment; adieu.

But farewell, king: sith thus thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here.
Shaksp.
Whether we shall meet again, I know not,
Therefore our everlasting farewell take;
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius. Shak.
Be not amazed, call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shaksp.
An iron slumber shuts my swimming eyes;
And now farewell, involv'd in shades of night,
For ever I am ravish'd from thy sight. Dryden.
Farewell, says he; the parting sound scarce fell
From his faint lips, but she replied farewell. Dryd.
O queen farewell! and still possest
Of dear remembrance, blessing still and blest.
Pope.

2. It is sometimes used only as an expression of separation without kindness.

Farewell the year, which threaten'd so
The fairest light the world can show. Waller.
Treading the path to noble ends,
A long farewell to love I gave;
Resolv'd my country and my friends
All that remain'd of me should have. Waller.

3. Its original verbal meaning is preserved when it is used plurally.

Farewell, master Silence: I will not use many words with you; fare you well, gentlemen, both.
Shaksp.

FARE'WELL, fâre-wêl'. n. s.

1. Leave; act of departure.

See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun. Shak.
If chance the radiant sun with farewell sweet,
Extend his ev'ning beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleeting herds
Attest their joy, that hill and valley ring. Milton.
As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell. Dryden.
Before I take my farewell of the subject, I shall advise the author for the future to speak his meaning more plainly. Addison.

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective; leave-taking.

Several ingenious writers, who have taken their leave of the publick in farewell papers, will not give over so, but intend to appear again; though perhaps under another form, and with a different title. Spectator.

FARINA'CEOUS, fâr-ê-nâ'shûs. adj. [from farina, Lat.] Mealy; tasting like meal or flower of corn.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom for mankind, is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panick, and millet.
Arbuthnot.

FARM, fârm. n. s. [ferme, Fr. ꝼeoꝛm, provision, Sax.]

1. Ground let to a tenant; ground cultivated by another man upon condition of paying part of the profit to the owner or landlord.

Touching their particular complaint for reducing lands and farms to their ancient rents, it could not be done without a parliament. Hayward.

2. The state of lands let out to the culture of tenants.

The lords of lands in Ireland do not use to set out their land in farm, for term of years, to their tenants: but only from year to year, and some during pleasure. Spenser.
It is great wilfulness in landlords to make any longer farms unto their tenants. Spenser.

To FARM, fârm. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To let out to tenants at a certain rent.

We are enforc'd to farm our royal realm,
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand. Shaksp.

Pour in sow's blood that hath litter'd
Her nine farrow. Shaksp.

To FA'RROW, fâr'rô. v. a. To bring pigs. It is used only of swine.

Sows ready to farrow this time of the year.
Tusser.
The swine, although multiparous, yet being bisulcous, and only cloven-hoofed, is farrowed with open eyes, as other bisulcous animals. Brown.
Ev'n her, who did her numerous offspring boast,
As fair and fruitful as the sow that carry'd
The thirty pigs at one large litter farrow'd. Dryd.

FART, fârt. n. s. [ꝼeꝛt, Sax.] Wind from behind.

Love is the fart
Of every heart;
It pains a man when 'tis kept close;
And others doth offend, when 'tis let loose.
Suckling.

To FART, fârt. v. a. [from the noun.] To break wind behind.

As when we a gun discharge,
Although the bore be ne'er so large,
Before the flame from muzzle burst,
Just at the breech it flashes first;
So from my lord his passion broke,
He farted first, and then he spoke. Swift.

FA'RTHER, fâr'thêr. adv. [This word is now generally considered as the comparative degree of far; but by no analogy can far make farther or farthest: it is therefore probable, that the ancient orthography was nearer the true, and that we ought to write further and furthest, from forth, forther, forthest, ꝼoꝛðoꝛ, ꝼuꝛðeꝛ, Saxon; the o and u, by resemblance of sound, being first confounded in speech, and afterward in books.] At a greater distance; to a greater distance; more remotely; beyond; moreover.

To make a perfect judgment of good pictures, when compared with one another, besides rules, there is farther required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden.
They contented themselves with the opinions, fashions, and things of their country, without looking any farther. Locke.

FA'RTHER, fâr'thêr.[98] adj. [supposed from far, more probably from forth, and to be written further.]

1. More remote.

Let me add a farther truth, that without ties of gratitude, I have a particular inclination to honour you. Dryden.

2. Longer; tending to greater distance.

Before our farther way the fates allow,
Here must we fix on high the golden bough. Dryd.

FA'RTHERANCE, fâr'thêr-ânse. n. s. [more properly furtherance from further.] Encouragement; promotion.

That was the foundation of the learning I have,

The graves of the rebellious generations were already fashioned in the clouds, which soon after should swallow up all living creatures. Raleigh.

The rib he form'd and fashion'd with his hands;
Under his forming hands a creature grew,
Man like, but different sex. Milton.

Inability will every one find in himself, who shall go about to fashion in his understanding any simple idea, not received by his senses from external objects, or by reflection from the operations of his mind about them. Locke.

How could this noble fabrick be design'd,
And fashion'd by a maker brute and blind?
Could it of art such miracles invent?
And raise a beauteous world of such extent?
Blackmore.

A different toil another forge employs,
Here the loud hammer fashions female toys:
Each trinket that adorns the modern dame,
First to these little artists ow'd its frame. Gay.

2. To fit; to adapt; to accommodate.

Laws ought to be fashioned unto the manners and conditions of the people to whom they are meant,

and not to be imposed upon them according to the simple rule of right. Spenser.

Ne do, I doubt, but that ye well can fashion
Yourselves thereto, according to occasion.
Hubberd's Tale.

Nature, as it grows again tow'rds earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy.
Shakspeare's Timon.

This cardinal,
Though from an humble stock undoubtedly,
Was fashion'd to much honour from his cradle.
Shakspeare.

3. To counterfeit; not used.

It better fits my blood to be disdained of all, than to fashion a carriage to rob love from any. Shaksp.

4. To make according to the rule prescribed by custom.

The value of the labour employed about one parcel of silver more than another, makes a difference in their price; and thus fashioned plate sells for more than its weight. Locke.

1. Predestination; predetermined order or series of things and events; preordination of inevitable causes acting invincibly in perpetual succession.

The stoicks held a fatality, and a fixed unalterable course of events; but then they held also, that they fell out by a necessity emergent from and inherent in the things themselves, which God himself could not alter. South.

2. Decree of fate.

By a strange fatality men suffer their dissenting to be drawn into the stream of the present vogue. King Charles.

All the father's precaution could not secure the son from the fatality of dying by a lion. L'Estrange.

3. Tendency to danger; tendency to some great or hazardous event.

Seven times seven, or forty-nine, nine times nine, or eighty-one, and seven times nine, or the years sixty-three, is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown.

FA'TALLY, fâ'tâl-lê. adv. [from fatal.]

1. Mortally; destructively; even to death.

The stream is so transparent, pure and clear,
That had the self-enamour'd youth gaz'd here,

So fatally deceiv'd he had not been,
While he the bottom, not his face, had seen.
Denham.

'Tis the procession of a funeral vow,
Which cruel laws to Indian wives allow,
When fatally their virtue they approve;
Cheerful in flames, and martyrs of their love. Dryd.

2. By the decree of fate; by inevitable and invincible determination.

To say that the world was made casually by the concurrence of atoms, is to affirm that the atoms composed the world mechanically and fatally; only they were not sensible of it. Bentley.

FA'TALNESS, fâ'tâl-nês. n. s. [from fatal.] Invincible necessity.

FATE, fâte. n. s [fatum, Lat.]

1. Destiny; an eternal series of successive causes.

Necessity or chance
Approach not me; and what I will is fate. Milton.
There is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate. Dryden.
You must obey me soon or late;
Why will you vainly struggle with your fate? Dryd.
When empire in its childhood first appears,
A watchful fate o'ersees its rising years. Dryden.
Random chance, or wilful fate
Guides the shaft from Cupid's bow. A. Philips.

2. Event predetermined.

Tell me what fates attend the duke of Suffolk?
By water shall he die, and take his end. Shaksp.

3. Death; destruction.

Viewing a neighbouring hill, whose top of late
A chapel crown'd, 'till in the common fate
Th' adjoining abbey fell. Denham.
Looking, he feeds alone his famish'd eyes;
Feeds ling'ring death, but looking not he dies:
Yet still he chose the longest way to fate,
Wasting at once his life and his estate. Dryden.
Courage uncertain dangers may abate;
But who can bear th' approach of certain fate!
Dryden.
The whizzing arrow sings,
And bears thy fate, Antinous, on its wings. Pope.

4. Cause of death.

With full force his deadly bow he bent,
And feather'd fates among the mules and sumpters sent. Dryden.

FA'TED, fâ'têd. adj. [from fate.]

She fled her father's rage, and with a train,
Driv'n by the southern blasts, was fated here to reign. Dryden.

2. Modelled in any manner by fate.

Her aukward love indeed was oddly fated;
She and her Polly were too near related. Prior.

3. Endued with any quality by fate. The stricture used by Dryden is unusual.

Bright Vulcanian arms,
Fated from force of steel by Stygian charms,
Suspended shone on high. Dryden.

4. Invested with the power of fatal determination. Peculiar to Shakspeare.

The fated sky
Gives us free scope. Shakspeare.

FA'THER, fâ'thêr.[34 78 98] n. s. [fæðep, Saxon. This word is found likewise in the Persian language.]

1. He by whom the son or daughter is begotten.

Father is a notion superinduced to the substance or man, and refers only to an act of that thing called man, whereby he contributed to the generation of one of his own kind. Locke.
Son of Bensalem, thy father saith it: the man by whom thou hast breath and life speaketh the word. Bacon.
He shall forget
Father and mother, and to his wife adhere. Milton.

2. The first ancestor.

It was said
It should not stand in thy posterity;
But that myself shall be the root and father
Of many kings. Shakspeare.
Abraham is the father of us all. Romans.

3. The appellation of an old man.

A poor blind man was accounted cunning in prognosticating weather: Epsom, a lawyer, said in scorn, Tell me, father, when doth the sun change? The old man answered, When such a wicked lawyer as you goeth to heaven. Camden.

4. The title of any man reverend for age, learning, and piety.

You shall find one well accompanied
With reverend fathers and well learned bishops.

1. To take; to adopt as a son or daughter.

Ay, good youth,
And rather father thee than master thee. Shaksp.

2. To supply with a father, of certain qualities.

I am no stronger than my sex,
Being so father'd and so husbanded. Shakspeare.
How light and portable my pain seems now,
When that which makes me bend makes the king bow!
He childed as I father'd. Shakspeare.

3. To adopt a composition.

Men of wit,
Often father'd what he writ. Swift.

4. To ascribe to any one as his offspring, or production: with on.

And lest we seem to father any thing upon them more than is their own, let them read. Hooker
My name was made use of by several persons, one of which was pleased to father on me a new set of productions. Swift.
Magical relations comprehend effects derived and fathered upon hidden qualities, whereof, from received grounds of art, no reasons are derived. Brown.

FA'THERHOOD, fâ'thêr-hûd. n. s. [from father.] The character of a father; the authority of a father.

Who can abide, that against their own doctors, both of the middle and latest age, six whole books should by their fatherhoods of Trent be, under the pain of a curse, imperiously obtruded upon God and his church? Hall.
We might have had an entire notion of this fatherhood, or fatherly authority. Locke.

FA'THERLESS, fâ'thêr-lês. adj. [from father.] Wanting a father; destitute of a father.

Ye shall not afflict any widow, or fatherless child. Exodus.
Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd;
Your widow dolours likewise be unwept. Shaksp.
The fatherless hath no friend. Sandys.
He caught his death the last county sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow woman and her fatherless children. Addison.

FA'THERLINESS, fâ'thêr-lê-nês. n. s. [from father.] The tenderness of a father; parental kindness.

FA'THERLY, fâ'thêr-lê. adj. [from father.] Paternal; like a father; tender; protecting; careful.

Let me but move one question to your daughter,
And, by that fatherly and kindly power
That you have in her, bid her answer truly. Shaksp.
The part which describes the fire, I owe to the piety and fatherly affection of our monarch to his suffering subjects. Dryden

FA'THERLY, fâ'thêr-lê. adv. In the manner of a father.

Thus Adam, fatherly displeas'd:
O execrable son! so to aspire
Above his brethren! Milton.

FA'THOM, fâth'ûm.[166] n. s. [fæðm, Sax.]

1. A measure of length containing six feet, or two yards; the space to which a man can extend both arms.

The extent of this fathom, or distance between the extremity of the fingers of either hand upon expansion, is equal unto the space between the sole of the foot and the crown. Brown.
The arms spread cross in a streight line, and measured from the end of the long finger on one hand, to that of the other, a measure equal to the stature, is named a fathom. Holder.

2. It is the usual measure applied to the depth of the sea, whence the line for sounding is called the fathom line.

Dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathom-line could never touch the ground.
Shakspeare.

All agree to spoil the publick good,
And villains fatten with the brave man's labour.
Otway.

Apollo check'd my pride, and bade me feed
My fatt'ning flocks, nor dare beyond the reed.
Dryden.

Yet then this little spot of earth well till'd,
A num'rous family with plenty fill'd,
The good old man and thrifty housewife spent
Their days in peace and fatten'd with content;
Enjoy'd the dregs of life, and liv'd to see
A long-descending healthful progeny. Dryden.

Tygers and wolves shall in the ocean breed,
The whale and dolphin fatten on the mead,
And every element exchange its kind,
When thriving honesty in courts we find. Granville.

FA'TTY, fât'tê. adj. [from fat.] Unctuous; oleaginous; greasy; partaking of the nature of fat.

The like cloud, if oily or fatty, will not discharge; not because it sticketh faster, but because air preyeth upon water, and flame and fire upon oil. Bacon.

The gourd
And thirsty cucumber, when they perceive
Th' approaching olive, with resentment fly
Her fatty fibres, and with tendrils creep
Diverse, detesting contact. Philips.

The common symptoms of the muriatick scurvy are, a saline taste in the spittle, and a lixivial urine, sometimes with a fatty substance like a thin skin a-top. Arbuthnot.

FATU'ITY, fâ-tû'ê-tê. n. s. [fatuité, Fr. from fatuous.] Foolishness; weakness of mind; morbidness; feebleness of intellect.

It had argued a very short sight of things, and extreme fatuity of mind in me, to bind my own hands at their request. King Charles.

These symptoms were so high in some as to produce a sort of fatuity of madness. Arbuthnot.

FA'TUOUS, fâtsh'û-ûs.[461] adj. [fatuus, Latin.]

1. Offence; slight crime; somewhat liable to censure or objection.

The prophet chuseth rather to charge them with the fault of making a law unto themselves, than the crime of transgressing a law which God had made. Hooker.

He finds no fault with their opinion about the true God, but only that it was not clear and distinct enough. Stillingfleet.

He that but conceives a crime in thought,
Contracts the danger of an actual fault:
Then what must he expect that still proceeds
To commit sin, and work up thoughts to deeds?
Dryden.

If you like not my poem, the fault may possibly be in my writing: but more probably 'tis in your morals, which cannot bear the truth of it. Dryden.

They wholly mistake the nature of criticism, who think its business is principally to find fault. Dryden.

To be desirous of a good name, and careful to do every thing, that we innocently may to obtain it, is so far from being a fault, even in private persons, that it is their great and indispensable duty. Atterbury.

Before his sacred name flies ev'ry fault,
And each exalted stanza teems with thought. Pope.

Which of our thrum-cap'd ancestors found fault,
For want of sugar-tongs, or spoons for salt? King.

Being void of all friendship and enmity, they never complain, nor find fault with the times. Swift.

They were invited from all parts for the use of kings, princes, and ministers. And in short, the favour of learning was the humour and mode of the age. Temple.

3. Kindness granted; benevolence shown.

All favours and punishments passed by him, all offices and places of importance were distributed to his favourites. Sidney.

The race is not to the swift, nor yet favour to men of skill. Eccles.

O, my royal master!
The gods, in favour to you, made her cruel. A. Philips.

4. Lenity; mildness; mitigation of punishment.

I could not discover the lenity and favour of this sentence; but conceived it rather to be rigorous than gentle. Swift.

5. Leave; good will; pardon.

Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.
—Give me your favour; my dull brain was wrought
With things forgot. Shaksp.

Ye' ere we enter into open act,
With favour, 'twere no loss if 't might be inquir'd
What the condition of these arms would be. Ben Jonson

Come down, said Reynard, let us treat of peace
A peace, with all my soul, said Chanticleer;
But, with your favour, I will treat it here. Dryd.

FEE, fêê.[246] n. s. [ꝼeoh, Sax. fee, Danish, cattle; feudum, low Lat.; feu, Scotish.]

1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgment of superiority to a higher lord.

All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgment of any service, or payment of any rent to any other. Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both to a superiour lord. And all our land in England, the crown-land, which is in the king's own hands in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum; for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord, to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum dominium, that is, the very property or demesne in any land, but the prince in right of his crown: for though he that has fee has jus perpetuum & utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts; fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and fee-conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail: fee-simple is that whereof we are seised in those general words, To us and our heirs for ever: fee-tail is that whereof we are seised to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body. And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special, is that where a man and his wife are seised of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. Cowell.

Now like a lawyer, when he land would let,
Or sell fee-simples in his master's name. Hubberd.

Here 's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. Shakspeare.

2. Property; peculiar.

What concern they?
The general cause; or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breast? Shakspeare.

3. Reward; gratification; recompense.

These be the ways by which, without reward,
Livings in courts be gotten, though full hard;
For nothing there is done without a fee. Hubberd.

Not helping, death 's my fee;
But if I help, what do you promise me? Shaksp.

4. Payments occasionally claimed by persons in office.

Now that God and friends
Have turn'd my captive state to liberty,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees? Shaksp.

5. Reward paid to physicians or lawyers.

He does not refuse doing a good office for a man because he cannot pay the fee of it. Addison.

6. Portion; pittance; share. Obsolete.

In pruning and trimming all manner of trees,
Reserve to each cattle their property fees. Tusser.

FE'EFARM, fêê'fârm. n. s. [fee and farm.] Tenure by which lands are held of a superiour lord.

John surrendered his kingdoms to the pope, and took them back again, to hold in feefarm; which brought him into such hatred, as all his lifetime after he was possest with fear. Davies.

To FEE, fêê. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To reward; to pay.

No man fees the sun, no man purchases the light, nor errs if he walk by it. South.

Watch the disease in time; for when within
The dropsy rages and extends the skin,
In vain for hellebore the patient cries,
And fees the doctor; but too late is wise. Dryden.

2. To bribe; to hire; to purchase.

I have long loved her, and ingrossed opportunities to meet her; feed every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her. Shaksp.

3. To keep in hire.

There 's not a thane of them but in his house
I have a servant feed. Shakspeare.

FE'EBLE, fê'bl.[405] adj. [foible, French.] Weak; debilitated; sickly; infirm; without strength of body or mind.

The men carried all the feeble upon asses to Jericho. 2 Chron.

Command th' assistance of a faithful friend,
But feeble are the succours I can send. Dryden.

How I have lov'd, excuse my falt'ring tongue;
My spirits feeble, and my pains are strong. Dryden.

We carry the image of God in us, a rational and immortal soul; and though we be now miserable and feeble, yet we aspire after eternal happiness, and finally expect a great exaltation of all our natural powers. Bentley.

Rhyme is a crutch that helps the weak along,
Supports the feeble, but retards the strong. Smith.

To FE'EBLE, fê'bl. v. a. [from the noun.] To weaken; to enfeeble; to deprive of strength or power. Not in use.

Or as a castle reared high and round,
By subtile engines and malicious slight
Is undermined from the lowest ground,
And her foundation forc'd and feebled quite.
Fairy Queen.

Shall that victorious hand be feebled here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement?
Shakspeare.

FEEBLEMI'NDED, fê'bl-mind'êd. adj. [feeble and mind.] Weak of mind; defective in resolution and constancy.

Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. 1 Thess.

FE'EBLENESS, fê'bl-nês. n. s. [from feeble.] Weakness; imbecility; infirmity; want of strength.

A better head Rome's glorious body fits,
Than his that shakes for age and feebleness.
Shakspeare.

Some in their latter years, through the feebleness of their limbs, have been forced to study upon their knees. South.

FE'EBLY, fê'blê. adv. [from feeble.] Weakly; without strength.

Like mine, thy gentle numbers feebly creep,
Thy tragick muse gives smiles, thy comick sleep.
Dryden.

To FEED, fêêd.[246] v. a. [fodan, Gothick; ꝼeðan, ꝼoeðan, Saxon.]

1. To supply with food.

Her heart and bowels through her back he drew,
And fed the hound that help'd him to pursue.
Dryden.

Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight. Arbuthnot.

2. To supply; to furnish.

A constant smoke rises from the warm springs that feed the many baths with which this island is stocked. Addison.

The breadth of the bottom of the hopper must be half the length of a barleycorn, and near as long as the rollers, that it may not feed them too fast. Mortimer.

3. To graze; to consume by cattle.

Once in three years feed your mowing lands, if you cannot get manure constantly to keep them in heart. Mortimer.

The frost will spoil the grass; for which reason take care to feed it close before winter. Mortimer.

4. To nourish; to cherish.

How oft from pomp and state did I remove,
To feed despair, and cherish hopeless love. Prior.

5. To keep in hope or expectation.

Barbarossa learned the strength of the emperor, craftily feeding him with the hope of liberty. Knolles.

6. To delight; to entertain; to keep from satiety.

The alteration of scenes, so it be without noise, feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.

7. To make fat. A provincial use.

To FEED, fēēd. v. n.

1. To take food. Chiefly applied to animals food.

To feed were best at home;
From thence, the sauce to meat is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it. Shakspeare.

2. To prey; to live by eating.

I am not covetous of gold;
Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost. Shaksp.

You cry against the noble senate, who,
Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else
Would feed on one another. Shakspeare.

Galen speaketh of the curing of the scirrhus of the liver by milk of a cow that feedeth upon certain herbs. Bacon.

Some birds feed upon the berries of this vegetable. Brown.

He feeds on fruits, which of their own accord,
The willing grounds and laden trees afford. Dryden.

The Brachmans were all of the same race, lived in fields and woods, and fed only upon rice, milk, or herbs. Temple.

All feed on one vain patron, and enjoy
Th' extensive blessing of his luxury. Pope.

3. To pasture; to place cattle to feed.

If a man shall cause a field to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field, he shall make restitution. Exodus.

4. To grow fat or plump. A provincial use.

FEED, fēēd. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Food; that which is eaten.

A fearful deer then looks most about when he comes to the best feed, with a shrugging kind of tremor through all his principal parts. Sidney.

An old worked ox fats as well as a young one: their feed is much cheaper, because they eat no oats. Mortimer.

2. Pasture.

Besides his cote, his flocks and bounds of feed
Are now on sale. Shakspeare.

3. Meal; act of eating.

Plenty hung
Tempting so nigh, to pluck and eat my fill
I spared not: for such pleasure till that hour
At feed or fountain never had I found. Milton.

FE'EDER, fēēd'ûr. n. s. [from feed.]

1. One that gives food.

The beast obeys his keeper, and looks up,
Not to his master's but his feeder's hand. Denham.

2. An exciter; an encourager.

When thou do'st hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou was't,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots. Shakspeare.

3. One that eats.

With eager feeding, food doth choak the feeder. Shakspeare.

But that our feasts
In every mess have folly, and the feeders
Jest with it as a custom, I should blush
To see you so attired. Shakspeare.

We meet in Aristotle with one kind of thrush, called the missel-thrush, or feeder upon misselto. Brown.

4. One that eats in a certain mode: as, a nice feeder, a gross feeder.

But such fine feeders are no guests for me;
Riot agrees not with frugality:
Then, that unfashionable man am I,
With me they'd starve for want of ivory. Dryden.

To FEEL, fēēl. v. n. pret. felt; part. pass. felt. [pelan, Sax.]

1. To have perception of things by the touch.

The sense of feeling can give us a notion of extension, shape, and all other ideas that enter at the eye, except colours. Addison.

2. To search by feeling. See FEELER.

They should seek the Lord, if happily they might feel after him, and find him. Acts.

3. To have a quick sensibility of good or evil, right or wrong.

Man, who feels for all mankind. Pope.

4. To appear to the touch.

Blind men say black feels rough, and white feels smooth. Dryden.

He hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour. Shakspeare.

3. To have perception of.

The air is so thin, that a bird has therein no feeling of her wings, or any resistance of air to mount herself by. Raleigh.

4. To have sense of external pain or pleasure.

Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel. Milton.

But why should those be thought to 'scape who feel
Those rods of scorpions and those whips of steel? Creech.

5. To be effected by; to perceive mentally.

Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it! Shaksp.

The well-sung woes shall sooth my pensive ghost;
He best can paint them who can feel them most. Pope.

Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive,
E'er felt such grief, such terrour, and despair. Pope.

6. To know; to be acquainted with.

His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little. Shaksp.

FEEL, fēēl. n. s. [from the verb.] The sense of feeling; the touch.

The difference of these tumours will be distinguished by the feel. Sharp.

FE'ELER, fēēl'ûr. n. s. [from feel.]

1. One that feels.

This hand, whose touch,
Whose ev'ry touch would force the feeler's soul
To th' oath of loyalty. Shakspeare.

2. The horns or antennæ of insects.

Insects clean their eyes with their forelegs as well as antennæ; and as they are perpetually feeling and searching before them with their feelers or antennæ, I am apt to think that besides wiping and cleaning the eyes, the uses here named may be admitted. Derham.

FE'ELING, fēēl'ing. participial adj. [from feel.]

1. Expressive of great sensibility.

O wretched state of man in self-division!
O well thou say'st a feeling declaration
Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep incision! Sidney.

Thy wailing words do much my spirits move,
They uttered are in such a feeling fashion. Sidney.

Write 'till your ink be dry, and with your tears
Moist it again; and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity. Shakspeare.

2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakspeare.

I had a feeling sense
Of all your royal favours; but this last
Strikes through my heart. Southerne.

FE'ELING, fēēl'ing. n. s. [from feel.]

1. The sense of touch.

Why was the sight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd;
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd;
That she might look at will through every pore? Milton.

2. Power of action upon sensibility.

The apprehension of the good
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse. Shaksp.

3. Perception; sensibility.

Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing and compassionate towards his subjects. Bacon.

Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it. Bacon's Essays.

As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness, which may be called a sort of internal feeling. Watts.

FE'ELINGLY, fēēl'ing-lė. adv. [from feeling.]

1. With expression of great sensibility.

The princes might judge that he meant himself, who spoke so feelingly. Sidney.

He would not have talked so feelingly of Codrus's bed, if there had been room for a bed-fellow in it. Pope.

2. So as to be sensibly felt.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
This is no flattery: these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am. Shaksp.

He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good, and of the new purchased evil. Raleigh.

FEET, fēēt.[246] n. s. The plural of foot.

His brother's image to his mind appears,
Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet with fears. Pope.

FE'ETLESS, fēēt'lės. adj. [from feet.] Being without feet.

Geoffrey of Boulloin broched three feetless birds, called allerions, upon his arrow. Camden.

To FEIGN, fāne.[294 385] v. a. [feindre, Fr. fingo, Lat.]

1. To invent; to image by an act of the mind.

Abominable, unutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv'd,
Gorgons, and hydras, and chimæras dire! Milton.

No such things are done as thou sayest, but thou feigned'st them out of thine own heart. Nehemiah.

2. To make a show of.

But both his hands, most filthy feculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And feign'd to wash themselves incessantly. Spenser.

3. To make a show of; to do upon some false pretence.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain,
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

4. To dissemble; to conceal. Obsolete.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear;
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign. Fairy Queen.

To FEIGN, fāne. v. n. To relate falsely; to image from the invention; to tell fabulously.

Therefore the poet

Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But musick for the time doth change his nature.
Shakspeare.

FE'IGNEDLY, fâne'êd-lê.[364] adv. [from feign.] In fiction; not truly.

Such is found to have been falsely and feignedly in some of the heathens. Bacon.

FE'IGNER, fâne'ûr. n. s. [from feign.] Inventer; contriver of a fiction.

And these three voices differ; all the things done, the doing and the doer; the thing feigned, the feigning and the feigner; so the poem, the poesy and the poet. Ben Jonson.

FEINT, fânt.[249] participial adj. [from feign, for feigned; or feint, Fr.] Counterfeit; seeming.

The mind by degrees loses its natural relish of real solid truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be but dressed up into any feint appearance of it. Locke.

FEINT, fânt.[249] n. s. [feint, French.]

1. A false appearance; an offer of something not intended to be.

Courtly's letter is but a feint to get off. Spect.

2. A mock assault; an appearance of aiming at one part, when another is intended to be struck.

FELI'CITY, fê-lîs'ê-tê. n. s. [felicitas, Lat. felicité, Fr.] Happiness; prosperity; blisfulness; blessedness.

The joyous day, dear Lord, with joy begin,
And grant that we, for whom thou didest die,
Being with thy dear blood clean wash'd from sin,
May live for ever in felicity. Spenser.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity;
But virtue join'd with riches and long life,
In corporal pleasure he, and careless ease. Milton.

The felicities of her wonderful reign may be complete. Atterbury.

How great, how glorious a felicity, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable nature, is revealed to our hopes in the gospel? Rogers.

FE'LINE, fê'line.[140] adj. [felinus, Lat.] Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.

Even as in the beaver, from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail which is feline, or a long taper. Grew.

FELL, fêl. adj. [ƿelle, Saxon.]

1. Cruel; barbarous; inhuman.

It seemed fury, discord, madness fell,
Flew from his lap when he unfolds the same.
Fairfax.

So fellest foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep,
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakspeare.

2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakspeare.

I know thee, love, wild as the raging main,
More fell than tygers on the Lybian plain. Pope.

Scorning all the taming arts of man,
The keen hyena, fellest of the fell. Thomson.

FELL, fêl. n. s. [ƿelle, Sax.] The skin; the hide. Not used.

Wipe thine eye:
The goujers shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Ere they shall make us weep. Shakspeare.

The time has been my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir. Shaksp.

To FELL, fêl. v. a. [fellen, German.]

1. To knock down; to bring to the ground.

Villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. Shakspeare.

Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again.
Daniel.

Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stock, and felled him. Raleigh.

His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was felled. Howel.

On their whole host I flew
Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon fell'd
Their choicest youth: they only liv'd who fled.
Milton.

2. It seems improperly joined with down or along.

Whom with such force he struck he fell'd him down,
And cleft the circle of his golden crown. Dryden.

I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case. Dryden.

3. To hew down; to cut down.

Then would he seem a farmer that would sell
Bargains of woods, which he did lately fell.
Hubberd's Tale.

Proud Arcite and fierce Palamon,
In mortal battle doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flam'd their faulchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam; so strong they struck,
There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak.
Dryden.

FELL, fêl. The preterit of To fall.

None on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell
By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd. Milton.

FE'LLER, fêl'lûr. n. s. [from fell.] One that hews down.

Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us. Isaiah.

FELLI'FLUOUS, fêl-lîf'flû-ûs.[518] adj. [fel and fluo, Lat.] Flowing with gall. Dict.

FE'LLNESS, fêl'nês. n. s. [from fell.] Cruelty; savageness; fury; rage.

When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steep,
For very fellness loud he 'gan to weep. Fairy Q.

FE'LLOE, fêl'lô.[295] n. s. [felge, Danish.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written fally or felly.

Out, out, thou strumpet Fortune! all you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n.
Shakspeare

Axle-trees, naves, felloes and spokes were all molten. Kings.

FE'LLOW, fêl'lô.[327] n. s. [quasi, to follow, Minshew; from ƿe, faith, and lag, bound, Sax. Junius; fallow, Scotish.]

1. A companion; one with whom we consort.

In youth I had twelve fellows like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good end. Ascham.

To be your fellow,
You may deny me: but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no. Shaksp. Tempest.

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love? Dryden.

2. An associate; one united in the same affair.

Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal fabrick mounts the walls. Dryd.

3. One of the same kind.

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may
Without controul upon their fellows prey. Waller.

A shepherd had one favourite dog: he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of his fellows. L'Estrange.

4. Equal; peer.

So you are to be hereafter fellows, and no longer servants. Sidney.

Chieftain of the rest
I chose him here: the earth shall him allow;
His fellows late, shall be his subjects now. Fairfax.

5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.

When virtue is lodged in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice; the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows. Addison.

6. One like or equal to another: as, this knave hath not his fellow.

7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness; sometimes with esteem; but generally with some degree of contempt.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.
—The same indeed; a very valiant fellow. Shaksp.

An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made his peace; whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crushed, but that he saved himself upon his horns. Bacon.

Full fifteen thousand lusty fellows
With fire and sword the fort maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us,
Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.

8. A word of contempt; the foolish mortal; the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.

Those great fellows scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleased the eternal justice to make them suffer death by their hands. Sidney.

Cassio hath here been set on in the dark
By Rodorigo, and fellows that are 'scap'd. Shaksp.

I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Shakspeare.

Opinion that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood. Shakspeare.

How oft the sight of means, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? for hadst thou not been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted and signed to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind. Shaksp.

The Moor's abus'd by some most villainous knave,
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow!
Shakspeare.

The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet. L'Estrange.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock, and the Sisyphian seed
By fraud and theft asserts his father's breed.
Dryden.

You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow, as this Mr. Wood, could have got his majesty's broad seal. Swift.

You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cobler like, the parson will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella. Pope.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.

The provost commanded his men to hang him up on the nearest tree: then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man.
Hayward.

10. A member of a college that shares its revenues, or of any incorporated society.

There should be a mission of three of the fellows or brethren of Solomon's house, to gives us knowledge of the affairs and state of those countries to which they were designed. Bacon.

To FE'LLOW, fĕl'lō. v. a. To suit with; to pair with; to match. Fellow is often used in composition, to mark community of nature, station, or employment.

Imagination,
With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And fellow'st nothing. Shakspeare.

FELLOW-CO'MMONER, fĕl-lō-kŏm'ŭn-ŭr. n. s.

1. One who has the same right of common.

He cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the consent of all his fellow-commoners, all mankind. Locke.

2. A commoner at Cambridge of the higher order, who dines with the fellows.

FELLOW-CRE'ATURE, fĕl-lō-krē'tshūre. n. s. One that has the same creator.

Reason is the glory of human nature, and one of the chief eminences whereby we are raised above our fellow-creatures, the brutes, in this lower world.
Watts's Logick, Introduction.

FE'LLOW-HEIR, fĕl-lō-ârе'. n. s. Coheir; partner of the same inheritance.

The gentiles should be fellow-heirs. Eph.

FELLOW-HE'LPER, fĕl-lō-hĕlp'ŭr. n. s. Coadjutor; one who concurs in the same business.

We ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth. 3 John.

FELLOW-LA'BOURER, fĕl-lō-lā'bŭr-ŭr. n. s. One who labours in the same design.

My fellow-labourers have commissioned me to perform in their behalf this office of dedication.
Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

FELLOW-SE'RVANT, fĕl-lō-sĕr'vânt. n. s. One that has the same master.

Nor less think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellow-servant; and inquire
Gladly into the ways of God with man. Milton.

Fair fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slighted care
Than the bright dames we serve. Waller.

Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants to the same heavenly master while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children.
Atterbury.

FELLOW-SO'LDIER, fĕl-lō-sōl'jŭr. n. s. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men.

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.
Shakspeare.

Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier. Philippians.

FELLOW-STU'DENT, fĕl-lō-stū'dĕnt. n. s. One who studies in company with another, in the same class, under the same master.

I pr'ythee do not mock me, fellow-student.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.

If you have no fellow-student at hand, tell it over with your acquaintance. Watts's Logick.

FELLOW-SU'BJECT, fĕl-lō-sŭb'jĕkt. n. s. One who lives under the same government.

The bleeding condition of their fellow-subjects was a feather in the balance with their private ends. Swift.

FELLOW-SU'FFERER, fĕl-lō-sŭf'ŭr-ŭr. n. s. One who shares in the same evils; one who partakes the same sufferings with another.

How happy was it for those poor creatures, that your grace was made their fellow-sufferer! And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve! Dryden.

We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow-sufferers. Addison's Spectator.

FELLOW-WRI'TER, fĕl-lō-rī'tŭr. n. s. One who writes at the same time, or on the same subject.

Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it to their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them. Addison.

FELLOW-FEE'LING, fĕl-lō-fēē'lĭng. n. s. [fellow and feeling.]

1. Sympathy.

It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellow-feeling of the misfortune of my brother.
L'Estrange.

2. Combination; joint interest: commonly in an ill sense.

Even your milkwoman and your nurserymaid have a fellow-feeling. Arbuthnot.

FE'LLOWLIKE, FE'LLOWLY, fĕl'lō-like, fĕl'lō-lē. adj. [fellow and like.] Like a companion; on equal terms; companionable.

All which good parts he graceth with a good fellowlike, kind and respectful carriage. Carew.

One seed for another to make an exchange,
With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange.
Tusser.

FE'LLOWSHIP, fĕl'lō-shĭp. n. s. [from fellow.]

1. Companionship; consort; society.

This boy cannot tell what we would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship.
Shakspeare.

From blissful bow'rs
Of amarantine shade, fountain, or spring,
By th' waters of life, where'er they sat
In fellowships of joy, the sons of light
Hasted. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship. Calamy's Sermons.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination, and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cementer of society. Locke.

2. Association; confederacy; combination.

We would not die in that man's company;
That fears his fellowship to die with us. Shaksp.

Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves. Hooker.

Most of the other christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war. Knolles.

3. Equality.

4. Partnership; joint interest.

Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load.
Milton.

O love! thou sternly dost thy power maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.

5. Company; state of being together.

The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a sail! Shak.

6. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.

In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods. Bacon.

7. Fitness and fondness for festal entertainments, with good prefixed.

He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Clarendon.

8. An establishment in the college, with share in its revenue.

Corusodes having, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went to London. Swift.

9. [In arithmetick.] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that every man may have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss. Cocker.

FE'LLY, fĕl'lē. adv. [from fell.] Cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;
As is a tiger, that with greediness
Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find
A feeble beast doth felly him oppress. Spenser.

FELO-DE-SE, fē-lō-dē-sē'. n. s. [In law.] He that commits felony by murdering himself.

FE'LON,[166] fĕl'ŭn. n. s. [felon, Fr. felo, low Lat. ꝼel, Sax.]

1. One who has committed a capital crime.

I apprehend thee for a felon here. Shaksp.

The wily fox
Chas'd even amid' the folds; and made to bleed,
Like felons, where they did the murd'rous deed.
Dryden.

2. A whitlow, a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.

The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wiseman.

FE'LON, fĕl'ŭn. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman.

Ay me! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,
Might be the cause of so impatient plight?
What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,
Hath stirred up so mischievous despight? Spenser.

Then bids prepare th' hospitable treat,
Vain shews of love to veil his felon hate. Pope.

FELO'NIOUS, fē-lō'nē-ŭs. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; traitorous; villanous; malignant; perfidious; destructive.

This man conceiv'd the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Wotton.

O thievish night!
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lanthorn thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd the lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies. Dryden.

FELO'NIOUSLY, fê-lô'nê-ûs-lê. adv. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.

FE'LONOUS, fêl'ûn-ûs. adj. [from felon.] Wicked. Not used.

I am like for desperate dole to die,
Through felonous force of mine enemy. Spenser.

FE'LONY, fêl'ûn-ê. n. s. [felonie, French; felonia, low Latin; from felon.] A crime denounced capital by the law; an enormous crime.

I will make it felony to drink small beer. Shaksp.

FELT, fêlt. The preterit of feel.

FELT, fêlt. n. s. [ƿelt, Saxon.]

1. Cloth made of wool united without weaving.

It were a delicate stratagem to shoe
A troop of horse with felt. Shaksp.

2. A hide or skin.

To know whether sheep are sound or not, see that the felt be loose. Mortimer.

To FELT, fêlt. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite without weaving.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into kersey. Hale.

To FE'LTRE, fêl'tûr. v. a. [from felt.] To clot together like felt.

His feltred locks, that on his bosom fell,
On rugged mountains briars and thorns resemble. Fairfax.

FEL'UCCA, fê-lûk'â. n. s. [feleu, French, feikon, Arabick.] A small open boat with six oars. Dict.

FE'MALE, fê'mâle. n. s. [femelle, French; femella, Latin.] A she; one of the sex which brings young; not male.

God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. Genesis.

If he offer it of the herd, whether it be a male or female, he shall offer it without blemish. Leviticus.

Men more divine,
Indu'd with intellectual sense and soul,
Are masters to their females, and their lords. Shak.

1. Not male.

Female of sex it seems. Milton.

Swarming next appear'd
The female bee, that feeds her husband drone. Milton.

2. Not masculine; belonging to a she.

Other suns, perhaps,
With their attendant moons thou wilt descry,
Communicating male and female light;
Which two great sexes animate the world. Milton.

Add what wants,
In female sex, the more to draw his love. Milton

He scrupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge, not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charm. Milton.

If by a female hand he had foreseen
He was to die, his wish had rather been
The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen. Dryden.

3. Female Rhymes. Double rhymes, so called because, in French, from which the term is taken, they end in e weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:

Th' excess of heat is but a fable;
We know the torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.

The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems. Dryden.

FEME Covert, fêm. n. s. [French.] A married woman; who is also said to be under covert baron. Blount.

FEME Sole, fêm. n. s. [French.] A single woman; an unmarried woman.

FEMINA'LITY, fêm-ê-nâl'ê-tê. n. s. [from fœmina, Lat.] Female nature.

If in the minority of natural vigour the parts of feminality take place, upon the increase of growth thereof the masculine appears. Brown.

FE'MININE,[150] fêm'ê-nîn. adj. [fœmininus, Lat.]

1. Of the sex that brings young; female.

Thus we chastise the god of wine
With water that is feminine,
Until the cooler nymph abate
His wrath, and so concorporate. Cleaveland.

2. Soft; tender; delicate.

Her heav'nly form
Angelick, but more soft and feminine. Milton.

3. Effeminate; emasculated; wanting manliness.

Ninias was no man of war at all, but altogether feminine, and subjected to ease and delicacy. Raleigh.

FE'MININE, fêm'ê-nîn. n. s. A she; one of the sex that brings young; a female.

O! why did God create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature? And not fill the world at once
With men, as angels, without feminine? Milton.

FE'MORAL, fêm'ô-râl. adj. [femoralis, Lat.] Belonging to the thigh.

The largest crooked needle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation. Sharp.

FEN, fên. n. s. [ƿenn, Saxon; venne, Dutch.] A marsh; low flat and moist ground; a moor; a bog.

Mexico is a city that stands in the midst of a great marsh or fen. Abbot.

I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shak.

The surface is of black fen earth. Woodward.

He to Portina's wat'ry marshes went;
A long canal the muddy fen divides,
And with a clear unsully'd current glides. Addison.

FE'NBERRY, fên'bêr-rê. n. s. [fen and berry.] A kind of blackberry. Skinner.

FENCE, fênse. n. s. [from defence.]

1. Guard; security; outwork; defence.

That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors. Decay of Piety.

There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. L'Estrange.

To put them out of their parents' view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.

Let us bear this awful corpse to Cæsar,
And lay it in his sight, that it may stand,
A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath. Addison.

2. Enclosure; mound; hedge; fortified boundary.

In vain did nature's wise command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main;
Th' eternal fences overleap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

Shall I mention make,
Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?
Or the disdainful sea, that, shut from thence,
Roars round the structure, and invades the fence? Dryden.

Employ their wiles and unavailing care,
To pass the fences and surprise the fair. Pope.

3. The act of fencing; defence.

I bruised my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence. Shaksp.

4. Skill in defence.

I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despight his nice fence and his active practice. Shaksp.

To FENCE, fênse. v. a.

1. To enclose; to secure by an enclosure or hedge.

Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain
Destroyed have, each field to waste is laid;
In fenced towers bestowed is their grain,
Before thou cam'st this kingdom to invade. Fairfax.

He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and set darkness in my paths. Job.

Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hath fenced me with bones and sinews. Job.

He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls. 2 Mac.

See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail or other enclosure. Ayliffe.

2. To guard; to fortify.

So much of adder's wisdom I have learnt,
To fence my ear against thy sorceries. Milton.

With love to friend, th' impatient lover went,
Fenc'd from the thorns, and trod the deep descent. Dryden.

To FENCE, fênse. v. n.

1. To practise the arts of mahual defence; to practise the use of weapons.

He having got some iron, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants' hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.

2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.

Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against. Locke.

3. To fight according to art, by obviating blows as well as giving.

If a throstle sing, he falls straight a capering:
He will fence with his own shadow. Shaksp.

A beauteous heifer in the wood is bred,
The stooping warriors aiming head to head,
Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound
The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;
They fence and push, and, pushing, loudly roar,
Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore. Dryden.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies and gamesters' company. Locke.

These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgelplaying. Arbuthnot and Pope.

FE'NCELESS, fêns'lês. adj. [from fence.] Without enclosure; open.

Each motion of the heart rises to fury,
And love in their weak bosoms is a rage
As terrible as hate, and as destructive:
So the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean,
And heaves the billows of the boiling deep,
Alike from north, from south. Rowe.

FE'NCER, fên'sûr. n. s. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.

Calmness is great advantage; he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.

A nimble fencer will put in thrust so quick, that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Digby.

FE'NCIBLE, fĕn'sė-bl. adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence. Addison.

FE'NCINGMASTER, fĕn'sĭng-mȧs-tûr. n. s. [fence and master.] One who teaches the science of defence, or the use of weapons.

FE'NCINGSCHOOL, fĕn'sĭng-skȯȯl. n. s. [fence and school.] A place in which the use of weapons is taught.

If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is the most a gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencing-school, and every day exercising. Locke.

FEN-CRICKET, fĕn-krĭk'kĭt. n. s. [grillotalpa.] An insect that digs itself holes in the ground.

To FEND, fĕnd. v. a. [from defend.] To keep off; to shut out.

Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,
With fern beneath to fend the bitter cold. Dryden.

To FEND, fĕnd. v. n. To dispute; to shift off a charge.

The dexterous management of terms, and being able to fend and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning; but it is learning distinct from knowledge. Locke.

FE'NDER, fĕn'dûr. n. s. [from fend.]

1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall from rolling forward to the floor.
2. Any thing laid or hung at the side of a ship to keep off violence.

FENERA'TION, fĕn-ĕr-ȧ'shŭn. n. s. [fœneratio, Lat.] Usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.

The hair figured not only pusillanimity and timidity from its temper, but feneration and usury from its fecundity and superfetation. Brown.

FE'NNEL, fĕn'nĕl.[99] n. s. [fœniculum, Lat.] A plant of strong scent.

A sav'ry odour blown, more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at ev'n. Milt.

FERN, fĕrn. n. s. [ꝼeapn, Saxon.] A plant.

The leaves are formed of a number of small pinnules, dentated on the edges, and set close one by another on slender ribs. On the back of these pinnules are produced the seeds, small and extremely numerous. The country people esteem it a sovereign remedy decocted for the rickets in children. Hill.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood,
Horrid with fern and intricate with thorn;
Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn. Dryden.

There are great varieties of fern in different parts of the world; but they are seldom cultivated in gardens. Miller.

FE'RNY, fĕr'nė. adj. [from fern.] Overgrown with fern.

The herd suffic'd, did late repair
To ferny heaths, and to their forest-lare. Dryden.

FERO'CIOUS, fė-rō'shŭs.[357] adj. [ferox, Lat. feroce, French.]

1. Savage; fierce.

Smedley rose in majesty of mud;
Shaking the horrors of his ample brows,
And each ferocious feature grim with ooze. Pope.

2. Ravenous; rapacious.

The hare, that becometh a prey unto man, unto beasts, and fowls of the air, is fruitful even unto superfetation; but the lion, a ferocious animal, hath young ones but seldom, and but one at a time. Brown.

FERO'CITY, fė-rŏs'ė-tė. n. s. [ferocitas, Lat. ferocité, French; from ferocious.] Savageness; wildness; fierceness.

An uncommon ferocity in my countenance, with the remarkable flatness of my nose, and extent of my mouth, have procured me the name of lion. Addison.

FE'RVOUR, fêr'vûr.[314] n. s. [fervor, Lat. ferveur, French.]

1. Heat; warmth.

Were it an undeniable truth that an effectual fer-

vour proceeded from this star, yet would not the same determine the opinion. Brown.

Like bright Aurora, whose refulgent ray
Foretells the fervour of ensuing day,
And warns the shepherd with his flocks retreat
To leafy shadows, from the threaten'd heat.
Waller.

These silver drops like morning dew,
Foretell the fervour of the day;
So from one cloud soft show'rs we view,
And blasting lightnings burst away. Pope.

2. Heat of mind; zeal.

Odious it must needs have been to abolish that which all had held for the space of many ages, without reason so great as might in the eyes of impartial men appear sufficient to clear them from all blame of rash proceedings, if in fervour of zeal they had removed such things. Hooker.

Haply despair hath seiz'd her;
Or, wing'd with fervour of her love, she's flown,
To her desir'd Posthumus. Shaksp.

3. Ardour of piety.

There will be at Loretto, in a few ages more, jewels of the greatest value in Europe, if the devotion of its princes continues in its present fervour. Addison.

Teach him an alphabet upon his fingers, making the points of his fingers of his left hand both on the inside to signify some letter, when any of them is pointed at by the fore-finger of the right hand, or by any kind of fescue. Holder.

Teach them how manly passions ought to move;
For such as cannot think, can never love;
And since they needs will judge the poet's art,
Point 'em with fescues to each shining part. Dryd.

FE'SELS, fês'sêls. n. s. A kind of base grain.

Disdain not fesels or poor vech to sow,
Or care to make Egyptian lentils thrive. May.

FESSE, fês. n. s. [In heraldry.]

The fesse is so called of the Latin word fascia, a band or girdle, possessing a third part of the escutcheon over the middle: if there be above one, you must call them bars; if with the field there be odd pieces, as seven or nine, then you must name the field, and say so many bars; if even, as six, eight, or ten, you must say bar-wise or barry of six, eight, or ten; as the king of Hungary bears argent and gules, barry of eight. Peacham.

To FE'STER, fês'tûr. v. n. [fesse, in Bavarian, a swelling corrupted. Junius.] To rankle; to corrupt; to grow virulent.

I might, even in my lady's presence, discover the sore which had deeply festered within me. Sidney.

Inward corruption and infected sin,
Not purg'd, not heal'd, behind remained still,
And festering sore did rankle yet within. F. Queen.

How should our festered sores be cured? Hooker.

I have some wounds upon me, and they smart
To hear themselves remember'd.
—Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Shaksp.

Mind that their souls
May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies
Must lie and fester. Shaksp.

There was imagination, that between a knight whom the duke had taken into some good degree of favour, and Felton, there had been ancient quarrels not yet well healed, which might perhaps be festering in his breast, and by a certain inflammation produce this effect. Wotton.

Passion and unkindness may give a wound that shall bleed and smart; but it is treachery that makes it fester. South.

FE'STINATE, fês'tê-nâte. adj. [festinatus, Lat.] Hasty; hurried. Not in use.

Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festinate preparation: we are bound to the like. Shaksp.

4. To bring to any state by some powerful operation.

In smells we see their great and sudden effect in fetching men again, when they swoon. Bacon.

At Rome any of those arts immediately thrives, under the encouragement of the prince, and may be fetched up to its perfection in ten or a dozen years, which is the work of an age or two in other countries. Addison.

5. To draw within any confinement or prohibition.

General terms may sufficiently convey to the people what our intentions are, and yet not fetch us within the compass of the ordinance. Sanderson.

6. To produce by some kind of force.

These ways, if there were any secret excellence among them, would fetch it out, and give it fair opportunities to advance itself by. Milton.

An human soul without education is like marble in the quarry, which shews none of its beauties 'till the skill of the polisher fetches out the colours. Addi.

7. To perform: it is applied to motion or cause.

I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitying
The pangs of barr'd affections; though the king
Hath charg'd you should not speak together. Shaksp.

When evening grey doth rise, I fetch my round
Over the mount. Milton.

To come to that place, they must fetch a compass three miles on the right hand through a forest. Knolles.

8. To perform with suddenness or violence.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud.
Shakspeare.

The fox fetched a hundred and a hundred leaps at a delicious cluster of grapes. L'Estrange.

Talk to her of an unfortunate young lady that lost her beauty by the small-pox, she fetches a deep sigh. Addison.

9. To reach; to arrive at; to come to.

Mean time flew our ships, and straight we fetch
The syrens isle; a spleenless wind so stretcht
Her wings to waft us, and so urg'd our keel.
Chapman.

If earth, industrious of herself, fetch day
Travelling east; and with her part averse
From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part
Still luminous by his ray. Milton.

The hare laid himself down, and took a nap; for, says he, I can fetch up the tortoise when I please.
L'Estrange.

10. To obtain as its price.

During such a state, silver in the coin will never fetch as much as the silver in bullion. Locke.

To FETCH, fêtsh. v. n. To move with a quick return.

Like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about.
Shakspeare.

FETCH, fêtsh. n. s. [from the verb.] A stratagem by which any thing is indirectly performed, or by which one thing seems intended and another is done; a trick; an artifice.

An envious neighbour is easy to find,
His cumbersome fetches are seldom behind:
His fetch is to flatter, to get what he can;
His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee then. Tusser.

It is a fetch of wit;
You laying these slight sullies on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little soil'd i' th' working.
Shakspeare.

But Sidrophel, as full of tricks
As rota men of politicks,
Straight cast about to over-reach
Th' unwary conqu'ror with a fetch. Hudibras.

With this fetch he laughs at the trick he hath plaid me. Stillingfleet.

The fox had a fetch in't. L'Estrange.

From these instances and fetches
Thou mak'st of horses, clocks, and watches;
Quoth Mat, thou seem'st to mean
That Alma is a mere machine. Prior.

FE'TCHER, fêtsh'ûr. n. s. [from to fetch.] One that fetches any thing.

FE'TID, fêt'id.[296] adj. [fætidus, Lat.; fetid, Fr.] Stinking; rancid; having a smell strong and offensive.

Most putrefactions are of an odious smell; for they smell either fetid or mouldy. Bacon.

In the most severe orders of the church of Rome, those who practise abstinence, feel after it fetid hot eructations. Arbuthnot.

Plague, fiercest child of Nemesis divine,
Descends from Ethiopia's poison'd woods,
From stifled Cairo's filth and fetid fields. Thomson.

FE'TIDNESS, fêt'id-nês. n. s. [from fetid.] The quality of stinking.

FE'TLOCK, fêt'lôk. n. s. [feet and lock.] A tuft of hair that grows behind the pastern joint of many horses: horses of a low size have scarce any such tuft.
Farrier's Dict.

Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters.
Shakspeare.

White were the fetlocks of his feet before,
And on his front a snowy star he bore. Dryden.

FE'TOR, fê'tûr. n. s. [fætor, Lat.] A stink; a stench; a strong and offensive smell.

The fetor may discover itself by sweat and humour. Brown.

When the symptoms are attended with a fetor of any kind, such a disease will be cured by acescent substances, and none better than whey. Arbuthnot.

FE'TTER, fêt'tûr. n. s. It is commonly used in the plural fetters. [from feet; ꝼeꝺeꝛe, Sax.] Chains for the feet; chains by which walking is hindered.

Doctrine unto fools is as fetters on the feet; and like manacles on the right hand. Eccles.

Drawing after me the chains and fetters whereunto I have been tied, I have by other men's errours failed. Raleigh.

Passions too fierce to be in fetters bound,
And nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryd.

The wretch in double fetters bound,
Your potent mercy may release. Prior.

Pleasure arose in those very parts of his leg that just before had been so much pained by the fetter.
Addison.

I thought her pride
Had broke your fetters, and assur'd your freedom.
A. Philips.

To FE'TTER, fêt'tûr. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to enchain; to shackle; to tie. It is properly used of the feet, but is applied to other restraints.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness. Sidney.

My conscience! thou art fetter'd
More than my shanks and wrists. Shakspeare.

Fetter strong madness in a silken thread;
Charm ach with air, and agony with words. Shaksp.

Doth a master chide his servant because he doth not come, yet knows that the servant is chained and fettered, so as he cannot move? Bramhall.

A chain which man to fetter man has made;
By artifice impos'd, by fear obey'd. Prior.

To FE'TTLE, fêt'tl.[405] v. n. [A cant word from feel.] To do trifling business; to ply hands without labour.

When your master is most busy in company, come in and pretend to fettle about the room; and if he chides, say you thought he rung the bell.
Swift.

FE'TUS, fê'tû.s[296 489] n. s. [fœtus, Latin.] Any animal in embryo; any thing yet in the womb; any thing unborn.

That paradox of Hippocrates some learned physicians have of late revived, that the fetus respires in the womb. Boyle.

FEUD, fûde.[264] n. s. [ꝼeahꝺ, enmity, Sax.] Quarrel; contention; opposition; war.

Though men would find such mortal feuds
In sharing of their publick goods. Hudibras.

In former ages it was a policy of France to raise and cherish intestine feuds and discords in Great Britain. Addison.

Scythia mourns
Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions
Lie half unpeopled by the feuds of Rome. Addison.

FEU'DAL, fû'dâl. adj. [feudalis, low Latin.] Pertaining to fees, feus, or tenures by which lands are held of a superiour lord.

FEU'DAL, fû'dâl. n. s. A dependance; something held by tenure; a fee; a feu.

Wales, that was not always the feudal territory of England, having been governed by a prince of their own, had laws utterly strange to the laws of England. Hale.

FEU'DATORY, fû'dâ-tûr-ê. n. s. [from feudal.] One who holds not in chief, but by some conditional tenure from a superiour.

The duke of Parma was tempted to be true to that enterprize, by no less promise than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the seignory in chief of the pope, and the protection of Spain. Bacon.

FE'VER, fê'vûr. n. s. [fievre, Fr. febris, Lat.] A disease in which the body is violently heated, and the pulse quickened, or in which heat and cold prevail by turns. It is sometimes continual, sometimes intermittent.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bending?
Shakspeare.

Duncan is in his grave;
After life's fitful fever he sleeps well. Shakspeare.

Should not a lingering fever be remov'd,
Because it long has rag'd within my blood? Dryd.

He had never dreamed in his life, 'till he had the fever he was then newly recover'd of. Locke.

To FE'VER, fê'vûr. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a fever.

The white hand of a lady fever thee!
Shake to look on't. Shakspeare.

Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap,
She sprung from bed distracted in her mind. Dryd.

FE'VERET, fê-vûr-êt'. n. s. [from fever.] A slight fever; febricula.

A light feveret, or an old quartan ague, is not a sufficient excuse for non-appearance. Ayliffe.

FE'VERFEW, fê'vûr-fû. n. s. [febris and fugo, Lat.] A plant.

Common feverfew is the sort used in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England.
Miller.

FE'VERISH, fê'vûr-ish. adj. [from fever.]

1. Diseased with a fever.

To other climates beasts and birds retire,
And feverish nature burns in her own fire. Creech.

When an animal that gives suck turns feverish, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow. Arbuthnot.

2. Tending to a fever.

A feverish disorder disabled me. Swift.

3. Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.

We toss and turn about our feverish will,
When all our ease must come by lying still;
For all the happiness mankind can gain,
Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain. Dryden.

4. Hot; burning.

And now four days the sun had seen our woes,
Four nights the moon beheld incessant fire;
It seem'd as if the stars more sickly rose,
And farther from the feverish north retire. Dryden.

FE'VERISHNESS, fê'vûr-ish-nês. n. s. [from feverish.] A slight disorder of the feverish kind.

FE'VEROUS, fê'vûr-ûs. adj. [fievreux-se, French; from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever or ague.

Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world
Were feverous, and did tremble. Shakspeare

2. Having the nature of a fever.

All fev'rous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs. Milton.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.

It hath been noted by the ancients, that southern winds, blowing much, without rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain not.
Bacon.

FE'VERY, fê'vûr-ê. adj. [from fever.] Diseased with a fever.

O Rome, thy head
Is drown'd in sleep, and all thy body fev'ry.
Ben Jonson.

FE'UILLAGE, fûl'lâge. n. s. [Fr.] A bunch or row of leaves.

Of Homer's head I enclose the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval. Jervas to Pope.

FE'UILLEMORT, fûêl'môrt. n. s. [Fr.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to philemot.

FE'UTERER, fû'tûr-êr. n. s. A dogkeeper: perhaps the cleaner of the kennel.

FEW, fû. adj. [ꝼeo, ꝼeopa, Saxon; fua, Danish.]

1. Not many; not in a great number.

We are left but few of many. Jeremiah.

So much the thirst of honour fires the blood;
So many would be great, so few be good;
For who would virtue for herself regard,
Or wed without the portion of reward? Dryden.

On winter seas we fewer storms behold,
Than foul diseases that infect the fold. Dryden.

Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety. Locke

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score. Pope.

Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few. Swift.

The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age, have come up to that character. Berkley to Pope.

2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.

To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this. Hooker.

So having said, he thus to Eve in few:
Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done? Milton.

Thus Jupiter in few unfolds the charge. Dryden.

The firm resolve I here in few disclose. Pope.

FE'WEL, fû'îl.[99] n. s. [feu, Fr.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire: as firewood, coal.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fewel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions, and broils? Hooker.

Others may give the fewel or the fire!
But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire. Denham.

A known quantity of fewel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it. Bentley.

To FE'WEL, fû'îl. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.

Never, alas! the dreadful name,
That fewels the infernal flame. Cowley.

FE'WNESS, fû'nês. n. s. [from few.]

1. Paucity; smallness of number.

These, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers with whom they are embodied. Dryden.

2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness.

Fewness and truth, 'tis thus. Shakspeare.

To FEY, fâ. v. a. [veghen, Dutch.] To cleanse a ditch of mud.

Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
That all a dry summer no water will yield,
By feying and casting that mud upon heaps,
Commodities many the husbandman reaps. Tusser.

FIB, fib. n. s. [A cant word among children.] A lie; a falsehood.

Destroy his fib or sophistry in vain,
The creature 's at his dirty work again. Pope.

I so often lie,
Scarce Harvey's self has told more fibs than I. Pope.

To FIB, fîb. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to tell lies; to speak falsely.

If you have any mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you speak truth, you had best tell it me. Arbuthnot.

FI'BBER, fîb'bûr. n. s. [from fib.] A teller of fibs.

FIBRE, fi'bûr.[416] n. s. [fibre, Fr.; fibra, Lat.]

1. A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

2. A fibre, in physick, is an animal thread, of which some are soft, flexible, and a little elastick; and these are either hollow like small pipes, or spongeous and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membraneous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries, and muscles. Quincy.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And ev'ry slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the springs of life;
The name of father awes me still. Dryden.

FI'BRIL, fi'brîl. n. s. [fibrille, Fr.] A small fibre or string.

The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells. Cheyne.

FI'BROUS, fi'brûs.[314] adj. [fibreux, Fr.; from fibre.] Composed of fibres or stamina.

The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture. Bacon.

I saw Petreus' arms employed around
A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;
This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
The trunk was like a sapling in his hands. Dryden.

The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines. Arbuthnot.

FI'BULA, fîb'û-lâ. n. s. [Lat.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.

FI'CKLE, fîk'kl.[405] adj. [ꝼicol, Sax.]

1. Changeable; inconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; changeful; without steady adherence.

Remember where we are,
In France among a fickle wavering nation. Shaksp.

A slave whose easy borrow'd pride
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows. Shaksp.

Or likest hovering dreams,
The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train. Milton.

They know how fickle common lovers are;
Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.

We in vain the fickle sex pursue,
Who change the constant lover for the new. Prior.

2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.

He would be loth
Us to abolish; lest the adversary
Triumph, and say, fickle their state whom God
Most favours' Milton.

FI'CKLENESS, fîk'kl-nês. n. s. [from fickle.] Inconstancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Baccha of whom she complained. Sidney.

Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
In choice and change of thy dear loved dame. Fairy Queen

I am a soldier, and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness. Shaksp.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences. Addison.

Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell, I found that what she liked one day she disliked another. Addison.

FI'CKLY, fîk'kl-lê. adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.

Do not now,
Like a young wasteful heir, mortgage the hopes
Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms,
To raise a present pow'r that's fickly held
By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southern.

FI'CO, fi'kô. n. s. [Ital.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expressing a fig for you.

Having once recovered his fortress, he then gives the fico to his adversaries. Carew.

FI'CTILE, fîk'tîl.[140] adj. [fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.

The cause of fragility is an impotency to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so fictile earth is more fragil than crude earth. Bacon.

FI'CTION, fîk'shûn. n. s. [fictio, Latin; fiction, French.]

1. The act of feigning or inventing.

If the presence of God in the image, by a mere fiction of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it? Stillingfleet.

Fiction is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting: there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by fiction. Dryden.

2. The thing feigned or invented.

If through mine ears pierce any consolations,
By wise discourse, sweet tunes, or poets' fictions;
If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
While that my soul, she lives in afflictions. Sidney.

So also was the fiction of those golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent which tempted Evah. Raleigh.

3. A falsehood; a lie.

FI'CTIOUS, fîk-shûs.[292] adj. [fictus, Latin.] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior.

With fancy'd rules and arbitrary laws
Matter and motion man restrains,
And studied lines and fictious circles draws. Prior.

FICTI'TIOUS, fîk-tîsh'ûs. adj. [fictitius, Latin.]

1. Counterfeit; false; not genuine.

Draw him strictly so,
That all who view the piece may know
He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.

2. Feigned; imaginary.

The human persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty. Pope.

3. Not real; not true; allegorical; made by prosopopœia.

Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Addison.

FICTI'TIOUSLY, fĭk-tĭsh'ŭs-lė. adv. [from fictitious.] Falsely; counterfeitly.

These pieces are fictitiously set down, and have no copy in nature. Brown.

FID, fĭd. n. s. [fitta, Italian.] A pointed iron with which seamen untwist their cords. Skinner.

FI'DDLE, fĭd'dl. n. s. [ꝼıbele, Saxon; vedel, Dutch; fidel, German; fidicula, Latin, fiûll, Erse.] A stringed instrument of musick; a violin.

In trials of musical skill the judges did not crown the fiddle, but the performer. Stilling fleet.

The adventure of the bear and fiddle,
Is sung; but breaks off in the middle. Hudibras.

She tried the fiddle all over, by drawing the bow over every part of the strings; but could not, for her heart, find whereabout the tune lay. Addison.

To FI'DDLE, fĭd-dl.[405] v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To play upon a fiddle.

Themistocles being desired at a feast to touch a lute, he said he could not fiddle, but he could make a small town a great city. Bacon.

Others import yet nobler arts from France,
Teach kings to fiddle, and make senates dance. Pope.

2. To trifle; to shift the hands often and do nothing, like a fellow that plays upon a fiddle.

A cunning fellow observed, that old Lewis had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the map, trying to join the two pieces together. Arbuthnot.

Good cooks cannot abide what they justly call fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent and little done. Swift.

FI'DDLEFADDLE, fĭd'dl-făd'dl. n. s. [A cant word.] Trifles.

She said that her grandfather had a horse shot at Edgehill, and their uncle was at the siege of Buda; with abundance of fiddlefaddle of the same nature. Spectator.

FI'DDLEFADDLE, fĭd'dl-făd'dl. adj. Trifling; giving trouble, or making a bustle about nothing.

She was a troublesome fiddlefaddle old woman, and so ceremonious that there was no bearing of her. Arbuthnot.

FI'DDLER, fĭd'dl-ûr. n. s. [from fiddle.] A musician; one that plays upon the fiddle.

Let no saucy fiddler presume to intrude,
Unless he is sent for to vary our bliss. B. Jonson.

Nero put the fiddlers to death, for being more skilful in the trade than he was. Taylor.

These will appear such chits in story,
'Twill turn all politicks to jests,
To be repeated like John Dory,
When fiddlers sing at feasts. Dryden.

When miss delights in her spinnet,
A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

FI'DDLESTICK, fĭd'dl-stĭk. n. s. [fiddle and stick.] The bow and hair which a fiddler draws over the strings of a fiddle.

His grisly beard was long and thick,
With which he strung his fiddlestick. Hudibras.

FI'DDLESTRING, fĭd'dl-string. n. s. [fiddle and string.] The string of a fiddle that which makes the noise.

A fiddle-string, moistened with water, will sink a note in a little time, and consequently must be relaxed or lengthened one sixteenth. Arbuthnot.

FI'DELITY, fė-dĕl'ė-tė.[126] n. s. [fidelitas, Latin; fidelité, French.]

1. Honesty; veracity.

The church, by her publick reading of the book of God, preached only as a witness; now the principal thing required in a witness is fidelity. Hooker.

2. Faithful adherence.

They mistake credulity for fidelity. Clarke.

To FIDGE, fĭdje. } v. n. [A cant
To FI'DGET, fĭdje'ĭt.[99] } word.] To move nimbly and irregularly. It implies in Scotland agitation.

Tim, thou'rt the Punch, to stir up trouble;
You wriggle, fidge, and make a rout,
Put all your brother puppets out. Swift.

FIDU'CIAL, fė-dū'shăl.[126 357] adj. [fiducia, Latin.] Confident; undoubting.

Faith is cordial, and such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediential submission to the commands. Hammond.

FIDU'CIARY, fė-dū'shė-ă-rė. n. s. [fiduciarius, Latin.]

1. One who holds any thing in trust.

2. One who depends on faith without works.

The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary, that faith is the only instrument of his justification: and excludes good works from contributing any thing toward it. Hammond.

FIDU'CIARY, fė-dū'shė-ă-rė. adj.

1. Confident; steady; undoubting; untouched with doubt.

That faith, which is required of us, is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiduciary assent to whatever the gospel has revealed. Wake.

2. Not to be doubted.

Elaiana can rely no where upon mere love and fiduciary obedience, unless at her own home, where she is exemplarily loyal to herself in a high exact obedience. Howel.

FIEF, fēēf. n. s. [fief, French.] A fee; a manor; a possession held by some tenure of a superiour.

To the next realm she stretch'd her sway,
For painture near adjoining lay,
A plenteous province and alluring prey;
A chamber of dependencies was fram'd;
And the whole fief, in right of poetry, she claim'd. Dryden.

As they were honoured by great privileges, so their lands were in the nature of fiefs, for which the possessors were obliged to do personal service at sea. Arbuthnot.

FIELD, fēēld.[275] n. s. [ꝼelꝺ, Saxon; feld, German; veld, Dutch.]

1. Ground not inhabited; not built on.

Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove,
That hills and vallies, dale and field,
And all the craggy mountains yield. Raleigh.

By the civil law the corpses of persons deceased were buried out of the city in the fields. Ayliffe.

2. Ground not enclosed.

Field lands are not exempted from mildews, nor yet from smut, where it is more than in inclosed lands. Mortimer.

3. Cultivated tract of ground.

Or great Osiris, who first taught the swain
In Pharian fields to sow the golden grain. Pope.

4. The open country: opposed to house or quarters.

Since his majesty went into the field,
I have seen her rise from her bed. Shakspeare.

5. The ground of battle.

When a man is in the field, a moderate skill in fencing rather exposes him to the sword of his enemy, than secures him from it. Locke.

6. A battle; a campaign; the action of an army while it keeps the field.

You maintain several factions;
And whilst a field should be dispatch'd and fought,
You are disputing of your generals. Shakspeare.

What though the field be lost,
All is not lost. Milton.

7. A wide expanse.

The god a clearer space for heav'n design'd;
Where fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below. Dryden.

Ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove. Pope.

8. Space; compass; extent.

The ill-natured man gives himself a large field to expatiate in: he exposes failings in human nature. Addison.

I should enter upon a field too wide, and too much beaten, if I should display all the advantages of peace. Smalridge.

Who can this field of miracles survey,
And not with Galen all in rapture say,
Behold a God, adore him and obey. Blackmore.

9. The ground or blank space on which figures are drawn.

Let the field or ground of the picture be clean, light, and well united with colour. Dryden.

10. [In heraldry.] The surface of a shield.

FI'ELDED, fēēl'dĕd. adj. [from field.] Being in field of battle.

Now, Mars, I pr'ythee, make us quick in work;
That we with smoking swords may march from hence,
To help our fielded friends. Shakspeare.

Then fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king. Shaksp.

I drew this gallant head of war,
And cull'd these fiery spirits from the world,
To outlook conquest, and to win renown
Ev'n in the jaws of danger and of death. Shaksp.

4. Passionate; outrageous; easily provoked.

You know the fiery quality of the duke;
How unremoveable, and fixt he is
In his own course. Shakspeare.

5. Unrestrained; fierce.

Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,
Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,
Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,
With slow but stately pace kept on his course.
Shakspeare.

Through Elis and the Grecian towns he flew;
Th' audacious wretch four fiery coursers drew.
Dryden.

6. Heated by fire.

The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut, by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burn by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker.

See! from the brake the whirring pheasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings:
Short is his joy, he feels the fiery wound,
Flutters in blood, and panting beats the ground.
Pope.

FIFE, fife. n. s. [fifre, Fr.] A pipe blown to the drum; military wind musick.

Farewell the plumed troops, and the big war
That make ambition virtue! oh farewell!
Farewell the neighing steed and the shrill trump,
The spirit-stirring drum, the ear-piercing fife.
Shakspeare.

Thus the gay victim, with fresh garlands crown'd,
Pleas'd with the sacred fife's enlivening sound,
Through gazing crowds in solemn state proceeds.
Philips.

King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shaksp.

Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds
In ranks and squadrons, and right form of war.
Shakspeare.

The common question is, if we must now surrender Spain, what have we been fighting for all this while? the answer is ready: we have been fighting for the ruin of the publick interest, and the advancement of a private. Swift.

For her confederate nations fought, and kings were slain,
Troy was o'erthrown, and a whole empire fell.
Philips.

2. To combat; to duel; to contend in single fight.

One shall undertake to fight against another.
2 Esdras.

The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
The young ones in her nest, against the owl.
Shakspeare's Macbeth.

3. To act as a soldier in any case.

Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart,
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
By this brave duke came early to his grave. Shaks.

Greatly unfortunate, he fights the cause
Of honour, virtue, liberty, and Rome. Addison.

The hot and cold, the dry and humid fight.
Sandys.

To FIGHT, fite. v. a. To war against; to combat against.

Himself alone an equal match he boasts,
To fight the Phrygian and th' Ausonian hosts.
Dryden's Æneid.

FIGHT, fite. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Battle.

Gabriel, lead forth to battle these my sons
Invincible, lead forth my armed saints,
By thousands and by millions rang'd for fight.
Milton.

2. Combat; duel.

Herilus in single fight I slew,
Whom with three lives Feronia did endue;
And thrice I sent him to the Stygian shore,
'Till the last ebbing soul return'd no more. Dryd.

3. Something to screen the combatants in ships.

Who ever saw a noble sight,
That never view'd a brave sea fight!
Hang up your bloody colours in the air,
Up with your fights and your nettings prepare.
Dryden.

FI'GHTER, fi'tûr. n. s. [from fight.] Warriour; duellist.

I will return again into the house, and desire some conduct of the lady: I am no fighter. Shaksp.

O, 'tis the coldest youth upon a charge,
The most deliberate fighter! Dryden.

FI'GULATE, fig'û-lâte.[91] adj. [from figulus, Lat.] Made of potters clay.

FI'GURABLE, fig'û-râ-bl. adj. [from figuro, Lat.] Capable of being brought to certain form, and retained in it. Thus lead is figurable, but not water.

The differences of impressible, and not impressible, figurable and not figurable, scissible and not scissible, are plebeian notions. Bacon.

FIGURABI'LITY, fig-û-râ-bil'è-tè. n. s. [from figurable.] The quality of being capable of a certain and stable form.

FI'GURAL, fig'û-râl. adj. [from figure.]

1. Represented by delineation.

Incongruities have been committed by geographers in the figural resemblances of several regions. Brown.

2. FI'GURAL Number. Such numbers as do or may represent some geometrical figure, in relation to which they are always considered, and are either lineary, superficial, or solid. Harris.

FI'GURATE, fig'û-râte.[91] adj. [figuratus, Lat.]

1. Of a certain and determinate form.

Plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not; for look how far the spirit is able to spread and continue itself, so far goeth the shape or figure, and then is determined. Bacon.

2. Resembling any thing of a determinate form; as, figurate stones retaining the forms of shells in which they were formed by the deluge.

3. FI'GURATE Counterpoint. [In musick.] That wherein there is a mixture of discords along with the concords. Harris.

4. FI'GURATE Descant. [In musick.] That wherein discords are concerned, as well, though not so much, as concords; and may well be termed the ornament or rhetorical part of musick, in regard that in this are introduced all the varieties of points, figures, syncopes, diversities of measures, and whatever else is capable of adorning the composition. Harris.

FIGURA'TION, fig-û-râ'shûn. n. s. [figuratus, Lat.]

1. Determination to a certain form.

Neither doth the wind; as far as it carrieth a voice, with motion thereof confound any of the delicate and articulate figurations of the air in variety of words. Bacon.

2. The act of giving a certain form.

If motion be in a certain order, there followeth vivification and figuration in living creatures perfect. Bacon.

FI'GURATIVE, fig'û-râ-tîv. adj. [figuratif-ve, French; from figura, Latin.]

1. Representing something else; typical; representative.

This they will say, was figurative, and served by God's appointment but for a time, to shadow out the true everlasting glory of a more divine sanctity; whereunto Christ being long since entered, it seemeth that all these curious exornations should rather cease. Hooker.

2. Changed by rhetorical figures from the primitive meaning; not literal.

How often have we been railed at for understanding words in a figurative sense, which cannot be literally understood without overthrowing the plainest evidence of sense and reason. Stillingfleet.

This is a figurative expression where the words are used in a different sense from what they signify in their first ordinary intention. Rogers.

3. Full of figures; full of rhetorical exornations; full of changes from the original sense.

Sublime subjects ought to be adorned with the sublimest and with the most figurative expressions. Dryden.

FI'GURATIVELY, fig'û-râ-tîv-lè. adv. [from figurative.] By a figure; in a sense different from that which words originally imply; not literally.

The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself, in the first person, what belongs to others. Hammond.

The words are different, but the sense is still the same; for therein are figuratively intended Uziah and Ezechias. Brown.

Satyr is a kind of poetry in which human vices are reprehended, partly dramatically, partly simply; but, for the most part, figuratively and occultly. Dryden.

FI'GURE, fig'ûre. n. s. [figura, Lat.]

1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.

Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, briar-roses, single muskroses, single pinks and gilliflowers, which have five leaves; lilies, flower-deluces, borage, buglass, which have four leaves. Bacon.

Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases. Boyle.

Figures are properly modifications of bodies; for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be: whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued. Locke.

2. Shape; form; semblance.

He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion. Shaksp.

3. Personal; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean or grand.

The blue German shall the Tigris drink,
Ere I, forsaking gratitude and truth,
Forget the figure of that godlike youth. Dryden.

I was charmed with the gracefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses. Addison.

A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either. Clarissa.

4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.

While fortune favour'd, while his arms support
The cause, and rul'd the counsels of the court,
I made some figure there; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame. Dryden.

The speech, I believe, was not so much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country. Addison.

Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow. Addison.

Whether or no they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness. Addison.

Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people. Addison.

5. Magnificence; splendour.

If it be his chief end in it to grow rich, that he may live in figure and indulgence, and be able to retire from business to idleness and hurry, his trade, as to him, loses all its innocency. Law.

6. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.

Several statues which seemed at a distance of the whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in snow. Addison.

7. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.

In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the sinews of his art: for in them consists the principal beauty of his work. Dryden.

My favourite books and pictures sell;
Kindly throw in a little figure,
And set the price upon the bigger. Prior.

8. Arrangement; disposition; modification.

The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question. Watts.

9. A character denoting a number.

Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets, cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number
His love to Antony. Shaksp.

He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great task; but that is ever good for the publick: but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age. Bacon.

As in accounts cyphers and figures pass for real sums, so in human affairs words pass for things themselves. South.

10. The horoscope; the diagram of the aspects of the astrological houses.

We do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling: she works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and daubry beyond our element. Shaksp.

He set a figure to discover
If you were fled to Rye or Dover. Hudibras.

Figure-flingers and star-gazers pretend to foretell the fortunes of kingdoms, and have no foresight in what concerns themselves. L'Estrange.

11. [In theology.] Type, representative.

Who was the figure of him that is come. Romans.

12. [In rhetorick.] Any mode of speaking in which words are detorted from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptation, the change of a word is a trope, and an affection of a sentence a figure; but they are confounded even by the exactest writers.

Silken terms precise,
Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these summer flies
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. Shaksp.

Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bestow, must be understood only praying to pray. Stillingfleet.

They have been taught rhetorick, but never taught language; as if the names of the figures that embellished the discourse of those who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

13. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.

To FI'GURE, fig'ûre. v. a. [from figuro, Lat.]

1. To form into any determinate shape.

Trees and herbs, in the growing forth of their boughs and branches, are not figured, and keep no order. Bacon.

Accept this goblet, rough with figur'd gold. Dryden.

2. To show by corporeal resemblance: as in picture or statuary.

Arachne figur'd how Jove did abuse
Europa like a bull, and on his back
Her through the sea did bear; so lively seen,
That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween. Spenser.

Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high,
O'er figur'd worlds now travels with his eye. Pope.

3. To cover or adorn with figures, or images.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,
My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shaksp.

4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.

But this effusion of such manly drops,
Startle mine eyes, and make me more amaz'd
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heav'n
Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Shaksp.

5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.

When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted, and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figureth, and representeth their end. Hooker.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased. Shaksp.

Marriage rings are not of this stuff:
Oh! why should ought less precious or less tough

An heroic poem should be more fitted to the common actions and passions of human life, and more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us than was done by the ancients. Dryd.

The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams. Addison.

6. To image in the mind.

None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood. Temple.

If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear
No thought can figure, and no tongue declare. Prior.

7. To prefigure; to foreshow.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun;
In this the heaven figures some event. Shaksp.

8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to do. Locke.

9. To note by characters.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within,
As thro' a crystal glass the figur'd hours are seen. Dryden.

FI'GURE-FLINGER, fig'ûre-fling-ûr. n. s. [figure and fling.] A pretender to astrology and prediction.

Quacks, figure-flingers, pettifoggers, and republican plotters cannot well live without it. Collier.

FILA'CEOUS, fê-là'shûs.[357] adj. [from filum, Lat.] Consisting of threads; composed of threads.

They make cables of the bark of lime trees: it is the stalk that maketh the filaceous matter commonly, and sometimes the down that groweth above. Bacon.

FI'LACER, fil'â-sûr.[98] n. s. [filazarius, low Lat. filum.] An officer in the Common Pleas, so called because he files those writs whereon he makes process. There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt. Harris.

FI'LAMENT, fil'â-mênt. n. s. [filament, Fr. filamenta, Lat.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.

The effluvium passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it stirreth not the bodies interposed. Broome.

The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of whithered veins and filaments. Harvey.

The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray
On the next threads and filaments does bear,
Which form the springy texture of the air;
And those still strike the next, 'till to the sight
The quick vibration propagates the light. Blackmore.

The dung of horses is nothing but the filaments of the hay, and as such, combustible. Arbuthnot.

FI'LBERT, fil'bûrt.[98] n. s. [This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beards or husks, as corrupted from full beard or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither.] A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.

In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plums, pears, apricots, barberries, filberts, muskmelons, monkshoods of all colours. Bacon.

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!
On what else should thy worm of fancy feed?
Yet in a filbert I have often known
Maggots survive when all the kernel's gone. Dorset.

There is also another kind, called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruits of which are bigger than either of the former: the best are those of a thin shell. Mortimer.

To FILCH, filsh. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pillage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.

He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen. Spenser.

The champion robbeth by night,
And prowleth and filcheth by daie. Tusser.

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed. Shaksp.

He could discern cities like hives of bees, wherein every bee did nought else but sting: some like hornets, some like filching wasps, others as drones. Burton on Melancholy.

What made thee venture to betray,
And filch the lady's heart away. Hudibras.

The pismire was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods. L'Estrange.

Fain would they filch that little food away,
While unrestrain'd those happy gluttons prey. Dryden.

So speeds the wily fox, alarm'd by fear,
Who lately filch'd the turkey's callow care. Gay.

FI'LCHER, fĭlsh'ŭr.[98] n. s. [from filch.] A thief; a petty robber.

1. A thread. Not used.

But let me resume the file of my narration, which this object of books, best agreeable to my course of life, hath a little interrupted. Wotton.

2. A line on which papers are strung to keep them in order.

All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainder, should be cancelled and taken off the file. Bacon.

The petitions being thus prepar'd, do you continually set apart an hour in a day to peruse those, and then rank them into several files, according to the subject matters. Bacon.

Th' apothecary-train is wholly blind;
From files a random recipe they take,
And many deaths of one prescription make. Dryd.

3. A catalogue; roll; series.

Our present musters grow upon the file
To five and twenty thousand men of choice. Shak.

The valu'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle. Shak.

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.

Those goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn
Upon a tawny front. Shaksp.

So saying, on he led his radiant files
Dazzling the moon. Milton.

5. [ꝑeol, Saxon; vijle, Dutch.] An instrument to rub down prominences.

The rough or course-toothed file, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the unevenness of your work which the hammer made in the forging: the bastard-toothed file is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made: the fine-toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes, the bastard file made: and the smooth file is to take out those cuts or file-strokes, that the fine file made. Moxon.

A file for the mattocks and for the coulters.
1 Samuel.

The smiths and armourers on palfreys ride,
Files in their hands, and hammers at their side. Dryden.

FI'LECUTTER, file'kŭt-ŭr. n. s. [file and cutter.] A maker of files.

Gad-steel is a tough sort of steel: filecutters use it to make their chissels, with which they cut their files. Moxon.

To FILE, file. v. a. [from filum, a thread.]

1. To string upon a thread or wire. Whence to file a bill is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge.

From the day his first bill was filed he began to collect reports. Arbuthnot and Pope.

2. [from ꝑeolan, Saxon.] To cut with a file.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less. Hooker.

Let men be careful how they attempt to cure a blemish by filing or cutting off the head of such an overgrown tooth. Ray.

3. To smooth; to polish.

His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, and his eye ambitious. Shaksp.

4. [from ꝑilan, Saxon.] To foul; to sully; to pollute. This sense is retained in Scotland.

For Banquo's issue have I fil'd my mind,
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd. Shaksp.

His weeds divinely fashion'd,
All fil'd and mangl'd. Chapman.

To FILE, file. v. n. [from the noun.] To march in a file, not abreast, but one behind another.

All ran down without order or ceremony, 'till we drew up in good order, and filed off. Tatler.

Did all the grosser atoms at the call
Of chance file off to form the pondrous ball,
And undertermin'd into order fall? Blackmore.

FI'LEMOT, fĭl'ĕ-mŏt. n. s. [corrupted from feuille morte, a dead leaf, French.] A brown or yellow brown colour.

The colours you ought to wish for are blue or filemot, turned up with red. Swift.

FI'LER, fī'lŭr.[93] n. s. [from file.] One who files; one who uses the file in cutting metals.

FI'LIAL, fĭl'yăl.[113] adj. [filial-le, French; filius, Latin.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.

My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit. Sidney.

From imposition of strict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial works of law, to works of faith. Milton.

He griev'd, he wept, the sight an image brought
Of his own filial love, a sadly pleasing thought. Dryden.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.

And thus the filial godhead answ'ring spoke. Milton.

Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,
Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads;
And when the parent rose decays and dies,
With a resembling face the daughter buds arise. Prior.

FILIA'TION, fĭl-ē-ā'shŭn. n. s. [from filius, Lat.] The relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation ariseth were eternal. Hale.

FI'LINGS, fī'lĭngz. n. s. [without a singular; from file.] Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copperose. Brown.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Felton.

To FILL, fĭl. v. a. [ꝑyllan, Saxon.]

1. To store till no more can be admitted.

Fill the waterpots with water: and they filled them up to the brim. John.

I am who fill
Infinitude, nor vacuous space. Milton.

The celestial quires, when orient light
Exhaling first from darkness they beheld;
Birth-day of heav'n and earth; with joy and shout
The hollow universal orb they fill'd. Milton.

2. To store abundantly.

Be fruitful, multiply, and in the seas
And lakes and running streams the waters fill. Milton.

3. To satisfy; to content.

He with his consorted Eve
The story heard attentive, and was fill'd
With admiration and deep muse to hear. Milton.

Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and superabundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings. Cheyne.

4. To glut; to surfeit.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.
—Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools. Shaksp.

5. To FILL out. To pour out liquor for drink.

6. To FILL out. To extend by something contained.

I only speak of him
Whom pomp and greatness sits so loose about
That he wants majesty to fill them out. Dryden.

7. To FILL up. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

Hope leads from goal to goal,
And opens still, and opens on his soul;
Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind. Pope.

8. To FILL up. To supply.

When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find most of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the underwork of the nation. Addison.

9. To FILL up. To occupy by bulk.

There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and so make less water requisite. Burnet.

10. To FILL up. To engage; to employ.

Is it far you ride?
—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shaksp.

To FILL, fĭl. v. n.

1. To give to drink.

In the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double. Revelation.

We fill to th' general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss. Shaksp.

2. To grow full.

3. To glut; to satiate.

Things that are sweet and fat are more filling, and do swim and hang more about the mouth of the stomach, and go not down so speedily. Bacon.

4. To FILL up. To grow full.

Neither the Palus Meotis nor the Euxine, nor any other seas, fill up, or by degrees grow shallower. Woodward.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization. Sharp.

FILL, fĭl. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. As much as may produce complete satisfaction.

Her neck and breasts were ever open bare,
That aye thereof her babes may suck their fill. Fairy Queen.

But thus inflam'd bespoke the captain,
Who scorneth peace shall have his fill of war. Fairfax.

When ye were thirsty, did I not cleave the rock, and waters flowed out to your fill? 2 Esdras.

Mean while enjoy
Your fill, what happiness this happy state
Can comprehend, incapable of more. Milton.

Amid' the tree now got, where plenty hung
Tempting so nigh to pluck and eat my fill,
I spar'd not. Milton.

Which made me gently first remove your fears,

That so you might have room to entertain
Your fill of joy. Denham.
Your barbarity may have its fill of destruction. Pope.

2. [More properly thill.] The place between the shafts of a carriage.
This mule being put in the fill of a cart, run away with the cart and timber. Mortimer.

FI'LLER, fil'lůr. n. s. [from fill.]

1. Any thing that fills up room without use.
'Tis a meer filler, to stop a vacancy in the hexameter, and connect the preface to the work of Virgil. Dryden.
A mixture of tender gentle thoughts and suitable expressions, of forced and inextricable conceits, and of needless fillers up to the rest. Pope.

2. One whose employment is to fill vessels of carriage.
They have six diggers to four fillers, so as to keep the fillers always at work. Mortimer.

FI'LLET, fil'lit.[99] n. s. [filet, Fr. filum, Lat.]

1. A band tied round the head or other part.
His baleful breath inspiring, as he glides,
Now like a chain around her neck he rides;
Now like a fillet to her head repairs,
And with his circling volumes folds her hairs. Dryden.
She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair. Pope.

2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to veal.
The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd:
These morsels stay'd their stomachs; then the rest
They cut in legs and fillets for the feast. Dryden.

3. Meat rolled together and tied round.
Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shaksp.
The mixture thus, by chymick art
United close in every part,
In fillets roll'd or cut in pieces,
Appear'd like one continu'd species. Swift.

4. [In architecture.] A little member which appears in the ornaments and mouldings, and is otherwise called listel. Harris.
Pillars and their fillets of silver. Exodus.

To FI'LLET, fil'lit. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind with a bandage or fillet.

2. To adorn with an astragal.
He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapiters and filletted them. Exodus.

To FI'LLIP, fil'lip. v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered.] To strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion.
If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle. Shak.
Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars: then let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun. Shak.
We see that if you fillip a lutestring, it sheweth double or treble. Bacon.

FI'LLIP, fil'lip. n. s. [from the verb.] A jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.

FI'LLY, fil'lė. n. s. [filoy, Welsh; fille, Fr.]

1. A young horse or mare. Not now used.
Geld fillies, but tits, yet a nine days of age,
They die else of gelding, and gelders do rage:
Young fillies so likely of bulk and of bone,
Keep such to be breeders, let gelding alone. Tusser.
A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.

2. A young mare; opposed to a colt or young horse.
I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,
Neighing in likeness of a filly foal. Shaksp.
I am joined in wedlock, for my sins, to one of those fillies who are described in the old poet. Addis.

FILM, film. n. s. [ƿýlmepa, Saxon.] A thin pellicle or skin.
While the silver needle did work upon the sight of his eye, to remove the film of the cataract, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle. Bacon.
Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer sight
Had bred. Milton.
A stone is held up by the films of the bladder, and so kept from grating or offending it. Graunt.
There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phænomena of sight, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies. Bentley.
He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the sightless eyeballs pour the day. Pope.

To FILM, film. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.
It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
While rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shaksp.

FI'LMY, fil'mė. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.
So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;
And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly. Dryden.
The wasps with fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death
Bereave them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Philips.
Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glitt'ring textures of the filmy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
Where light disports in ever mingling dyes. Pope.

To FI'LTER, fil'tůr. v. a. [filtro, low Latin; per filum trahere.]

1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.

2. To strain; to percolate.
Dilute this liquor with fair water, filtre it through a paper, and so evaporate it. Grew.

FI'LTER, fil'tůr. n. s. [filtrum, Lat.]

1. A twist of thread, of which one end is dipped in the liquor to be defecated, and the other hangs below the bottom of the vessel, so that the liquor drips from it.

2. A strainer; a searce.
That the water passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ray.

FILTH, filth. n. s. [ƿilð, Saxon.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.
Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filths savour but themselves. Shaksp.
Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet; for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon.
How perfect then is man? from head to foot
Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sandys.
Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and sap'ence,
To spare the folks that give him ha' pence. Swift.

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.
Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson.

FI'LTHILY, filth'ė-lė. adv. [from filthy.] Nastily; foully; grossly.
It stuck filthily in the camel's stomach, that bulls, bears, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange.

FI'LTHINESS, filth'ė-nės. n. s. [from filthy.]

1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.
Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney.

2. Corruption; pollution.
They held this land, and with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime. Fairy Queen.
They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. South.

FI'LTHY, filth'ė. adj. [from filth.]

1. Nasty; foul; dirty.
Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shaksp.

2. Gross; polluted.
As all stories are not proper subjects for an epick poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subject both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden.

To FI'LTRATE, fil'tråte.[91] v. a. [from filter.] To strain; to percolate; to filter.
The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbuthnot.

FILTRA'TION, fil-trå'shůn. n. s. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.
We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.

FI'MBLE Hemp, fim'bl. n. s. [corrupted from female.]
The light summer hemp that bears no seed, which is called fimble hemp. Mortimer.
Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,
In May a good housewife will see it be sown;
And afterwards trim it to serve at a need,
The fimble to spin, and the carle for her seed. Tusser.

FIN, fin. n. s. [ƿin, Saxon; vin, Dutch.] The wing of a fish; the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.
He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shaksp.
Their fins consist of a number of gristly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles. More.
Thus at half-ebb a rolling sea
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watery herd, affrighted at the roar,
Rest on their fins awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wond'ring way. Dryd.

Still at his oar th' industrious Libys plies;
But as he plies, each busy arm shrinks in,
And by degrees is fashion'd to a fin. Addison.

FIN-FOOTED, fin'fût-êd. adj. [fin and foot.] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is described like fissipedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in latirostrous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet. Brown.

FI'NABLE, fi'nâ-bl.[405] adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine; that deserves a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable. Bacon.

He sent letters to the council, wherein he acknowledged himself favoured in bringing his cause finable. Hayward.

FI'NAL, fi'nâl.[88] adj. [final, Fr. finalis, Latin.]

1. Ultimate; last.

And over them triumphant death his dart
Shook; but delay'd to strike, though oft invok'd
With vows, as their chief good, and final hope. Milton.

2. Conclusive; decisive.

There be many examples where sea-fights have been final to the war. Bacon.

Henry spent his reign in establishing himself, and had neither leisure nor opportunity to undertake the final conquest of Ireland. Davies.

3. Mortal; destructive.

At last resolv'd to work his final smart,
He lifted up his head, but back again did start. Spenser.

4. Respecting the end or motive.

Some things in such sort are allowed, that they be also required as necessary unto salvation, by way of direct, immediate, and proper necessity final; so that, without performance of them, they cannot by ordinary course be saved, nor by any means be excluded from life, observing them. Hooker.

By its gravity air raises the water in pumps, siphons, and other engines; and performs all those feats which former philosophers, through ignorance of the efficient cause, attributed to a final, namely, nature's abhorrence of a vacuity. Ray.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. Collier.

FI'NALLY, fi'nâl-ê. adv. [from final.]

1. Ultimately; lastly; in conclusion.

Sight bereav'd
May chance to number thee with those Whom patience finally must crown. Milton.

2. Completely; without recovery.

Not any house of noble English in Ireland was utterly destroyed, or finally rooted out by the hand of justice, but the house of Desmond only. Davies.

Doubtlessly many men are finally lost, who yet have no men's sins to answer for but their own. South.

FINANCE, fin-nânse'. n. s. [French.] Revenue; income; profit. It is seldom used in the singular.

This sort of finance hath been increased. Bacon.

The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain; as be the escheats and forfeitures. Bacon.

His pretence for making war upon his neighbours was their pyracies, though he practised the same trade when he was straitened in his finances at the siege of Byzantium. Arbuthnot.

FINANCIER, fin-nân-sêêr'. n. s. [Fr.] One who collects or farms the publick revenue; one who understands the publick revenue.

FINCH, finsh. n. s. [ꝼinc, Saxon.] A small bird of which we have three kinds, the goldfinch, chaffinch, and bulfinch.

To FIND, find. v. a. [ꝼindan, Saxon; vinden, Dutch.]

1. To obtain by searching or seeking.

Ask, and it shall be given to you; seek, and ye shall find. Matthew.

Whereas thou hast searched all my stuff, what hast thou found of all the household stuff? Genesis.

She disappear'd, and left me dark; I wak'd
To find her, or for ever to deplore
Her loss. Milton.

A bird that flies about,
And beats itself against the cage,
Finding at last no passage out,
It sits and sings. Cowley.

2. To obtain something lost.

When he hath found his sheep, he layeth it on his shoulders rejoicing. Luke.

In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,
I oft found both. Shaksp.

3. To obtain something desired.

Thus I embolden'd spake, and freedom used
Permissive, and acceptance found. Milton.

Our voluntary service he requires,
Not our necessitated; such with him
Finds no acceptance, nor can find. Milton.

4. To meet with; to fall upon.

There watchful at the gate they find
Suspicion with her eyes behind. Dodsley.

In woods and forests thou art found. Cowley.

The bad must miss, the good unsought shall find. Pope.

5. To know by experience.

How oft will he
Of thy chang'd faith complain!
And his fortunes find to be
So airy and so vain! Cowley.

The torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.

6. To come to; to attain.

The sun that barren shines,
Whose virtue on itself works no effect,
But in the fruitful earth; there first receiv'd
His beams, unactive else, their vigour find. Milton.

7. To discover by study, or attention.

The fox that first his cause of grief did find,
'Gan first thus plain his case with words unkind. Hubberd.

Physicians
With sharpen'd sight some remedies may find. Dryden.

Thy maid! ah, find some nobler theme,
Whereon thy doubts to place. Cowley.

8. To discover what is hidden.

A curse on him who found the oar. Cowley.

9. To hit on by chance; to perceive by accident.

They build on sands, which if unmov'd they find,
'Tis but because there was no wind. Cowley.

10. To gain by any mental endeavour.

I by conversing cannot these erect
From prone, nor in their ways complacence find. Milton.

If we for happiness could leisure find,
And wand'ring time into a method bind,
We should not then the great man's favour need. Cowley.

We oft review, each finding like a friend
Something to blame, and something to commend. Pope.

11. To remark; to observe; to perceive.

Thus far to try thee, Adam, I was pleased,
And find thee knowing not of beast alone,
Which thou hast rightly nam'd, but of thyself. Milton.

Beauty or wit in all I find. Cowley.

12. To detect; to deprehend; to catch.

When first found in a lie, talk to him of it as a strange monstrous matter, and so shame him out of it. Locke.

13. To reach; to attain.

They are glad when they can find the grave. Job.

They also know,
And reason not contemptibly; with these
Find pastime, and bear rule. Milton.

In solitude
What happiness, who can enjoy alone,
Or all enjoying, what contentment find? Milton.

He did the utmost bounds of knowledge find,
Yet found them not so large as was his mind. Cowley.

14. To meet.

A clear conscience and heroick mind,
In ills their business and their glory find. Cowley.

The finding out of parables is a wearisome labour of the mind. Eccles.

21. To FIND out. To discover something hidden.

Can'st thou by searching find out God? Can'st thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? Job.

There are agents in nature able to make the particles of bodies stick together by very strong attractions, and it is the business of experimental philosophy to find them out. Newton.

What hinders, then, but that thou find her out,
And hurry her away by manly force? Addison.

22. To FIND out. To obtain the knowledge of.

The principal part of painting is to find out, and thoroughly to understand, what nature has made most beautiful. Dryden.

23. To FIND out. To invent; to excogitate.

A man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chronicles

24. The particle out is added often without any other use than that it adds some force or emphasis to the verb.

While she proudly march'd about,
Greater conquests to find out,
She beat out Susan by the by. Cowley.

It is agreeable to compare the face of a great man with the character, and to try if we can find out in his looks and features either the haughty, cruel, or merciful temper. Addison.

He was afraid of being insulted with Greek; for which reason he desired a friend to find him out a clergyman rather of plain sense than much learning. Addison.

25. To FIND, is a word of very licentious and capricious use, not easily limited or explained; its first idea is the consequence of search; the second, equally frequent, is mere occursion.

FI'NDER, find'ûr. n. s. [from find.]

1. One that meets or falls upon any thing.

We will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of madmen. Shaksp.

2. One that picks up any thing lost.

Some lewd squeaking cryer,
May gall the finder's conscience, if they meet. Donne.

O yes! if any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry,
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'rer. Crashaw.

FINDFA'ULT, find'fâlt. n. s. [find and fault.] A censurer; a caviller.

We are the makers of manners, Kate: and the liberty that follows our places, stops the mouth of all findfaults. Shaksp.

FI'NDY, fin'dė. adj. [ƿýndiȝ, Saxon.] Plump; weighty; firm; solid. Not used. Thus the proverb,

A cold May and a windy,
Makes the barn fat and findy;

means that it stores the barn with plump and firm grain. Junius.

FINE, fine. adj. [finne, Fr. fijn, Dutch and Erse; perhaps from finitus, completed, Latin.]

1. Not coarse.

Not any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,
With this so curious net-work might compare. Spenser.

He was arrayed in purple and fine linen. Luke.

2. Refined; pure; free from dross.

Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold. Ezra.

3. Subtile; thin; tenuous: as, the fine spirits evaporate.

When the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object in the grosser, things show greater: but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grosser medium and the object in the finer. Bacon.

4. Refined; subtilely excogitated.

In substance he promised himself money, honour, friends, and peace in the end; but those things were too fine to be fortunate, and succeed in all parts Bacon.

Whether the scheme has not been pursued so far as to draw it into practice, or whether it be too fine to be capable of it, I will not determine. Temple.

5. Keen; thin; smoothly sharp.

Great affairs are commonly too rough and stubborn to be wrought upon by the finer edges or points of wit. Bacon.

6. Clear; pellucid; transparent: as, the wine is fine.

Let the wine without mixture or stum be all fine,
Or call up the master. Johnson.

7. Nice; exquisite; delicate.

Are they not senseless then that think the soul
Nought but a fine perfection of the sense? Davies.

The irons of planes are set fine or rank: they are set fine when they stand so shallow below the sole of the plane, that in working they take off a thin shaving. Moxon.

8. Artful; dexterous.

The wisdom of all these latter times, in princes affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, than solid and grounded courses to keep them aloof. Bacon.

9. Fraudulent; sly; knavishly subtle.

Through his fine handling, and his cleanly play,
He all those royal signs had stol'n away. Hubberd.

10. Elegant; beautiful in thought or language.

To call the trumpet by the name of the metal was fine. Dryden.

11. Applied to person, it means beautiful with dignity.

12. Accomplished; elegant of manners.

He was not only the finest gentleman of his time, but one of the finest scholars. Felton.

13. Showy; splendid.

It is with a fine genius as with a fine fashion: all those are displeased at it who are not able to follow it. Pope.

The satyrical part of mankind will needs believe, that it is not impossible to be very fine and very filthy. Swift.

14. [Ironically.] Something that will serve the purpose; something worth contemptuous notice.

That same knave, Ford, her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed frenzy. Shaksp.

They taught us, indeed, to cloath, to dwell in houses,
To feast, to sleep on down, to be profuse:
A fine exchange for liberty. Philips.

FINE, fine. n. s. [ffin, Cimbr.]

1. A mulct; a pecuniary punishment.

The killing of an Irishman was not punished by our law as manslaughter, which is felony and capital; but by a fine or pecuniary punishment, called an ericke. Davies.

2. Penalty.

Ev'n this ill night your breathing shall expire,
Paying the fine of rated treachery. Shaksp.

3. Forfeit; money paid for any exemption or liberty.

The spirit of wantonness is sure scared out of him: if the devil have him not in fee simple with fine and recovery, he will never in the way of waste, attempt us again. Shaksp.

Besides fines set upon plays, games, balls and feasting, they have many customs which contribute to their simplicity. Addison.

How vain that second life in other breath,
Th' estate which wits inherit after death!
Ease, health, and life for this they must resign,
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine! Pope.

4. [from finis, Latin; fin, enfin, French.] The end; conclusion. It is seldom used but adverbially, in fine. To conclude; to sum up all; to tell all at once.

In fine, whatsoever he was, he was nothing but what it pleased Zelmane, the powers of his spirit depending of her. Sidney.

His resolution, in fine, is that in the church a number of things are strictly observed, whereof no law of scripture maketh mention one way or other. Hooker.

Still the fine's the crown;
Whate'er the course, the end is the renown. Shaksp.

Your daughter, ere she seems as won,
Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter;
In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
Herself most chastely absent. Shaksp.

The blessings of fortune are the lowest: the next are the bodily advantages of strength and health: but the superlative blessings, in fine, are those of the mind. L'Estrange.

In fine, he wears no limbs about him sound,
With sores and sicknesses beleagu'd around. Dryden.

In fine, let there be a perfect relation betwixt the parts and the whole, that they may be entirely of a piece. Dryden.

To FINE, fine. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To refine; to purify.

The fining pot is for silver, and the furnace for gold. Proverbs.

There is a vein for the silver, and a place for gold; where they fine it. Job.

2. To embellish; to decorate. Now not in use.

Hugh Capet, also, who usurp'd the crown,
To fine his title with some shews of truth,
Convey'd himself as heir to th' lady Lingare. Shaksp.

3. To make less coarse.

It fines the grass, but makes it short, though thick. Mortimer.

4. To make transparent.

It is good also for fuel, not to omit the shavings of it for the fining of wine. Mortimer.

5. [from the substantive.] To punish with pecuniary penalty.

To fine men one third of their fortune, without any crime committed, seems very hard. Locke.

To FINE, fine. v. n. To pay a fine.

What poet ever fin'd for sheriff? or who
By rhymes and verse did ever lord mayor grow? Oldham.

To FINEDRA'W, fine'drâw. v. a. [fine and draw.] To sew up a rent with so much nicety that it is not perceived.

FINEDRA'WER, fine'drâw-ûr. n. s. [from finedraw.] One whose business is to sew up rents.

FINEFI'NGERED, fine'fîng-gûr'd. adj. [fine and finger.] Nice; artful; exquisite.

The most finefingur'd workman on the ground,
Arachne by his means was vanquished. Spenser.

FI'NELY, fine'lė. adv. [from fine.]

1. Beautifully; elegantly; more than justly.

Plutarch says very finely, that a man should not allow himself to hate even his enemies; because if you indulge this passion on some occasions, it will rise of itself in others. Addison.

The walls are painted, and represent the labours of Hercules: many of them look very finely, though great part of the work has been cracked. Addison.

2. Keenly; sharply; with a thin edge or point.

Get you black lead, sharpened finely. Peacham.

3. Not coarsely; not meanly; gayly.

Saltpetre was but grossly beaten; for it should not be finely powdered. Boyle.

5. [Ironically.] Wretchedly; in such a manner as to deserve contemptuous notice.

Let laws be made to obey, and not to be obeyed, and you will find that kingdom finely governed in a short time. South.

For him she loves:
She nam'd not me; that may be Torrismond,
Whom she has thrice in private seen this day:
Then I am finely caught in my own snare. Dryden.

FI'NENESS, fine'nės. n. s. [from fine.]

1. Elegance; beauty; delicacy.

Every thing was full of a choice fineness, that if it wanted any thing in majesty, it supplied with increase in pleasure; and if at the first it struck not admiration, it ravished with delight. Sidney.

As the French language has more fineness and smoothness at this time, so it had more compass, spirit, and force in Montaigne's days. Temple.

The softness of her sex, and the fineness of her genius, conspire to give her a very distinguishing character. Prior.

2. Show; splendour; gayety of appearance

The fineness of cloaths destroys the ease: it often helps men to pain, but can never rid them of any; the body may languish under the most splendid cover. Decay of Piety.

3. Subtilty; artfulness; ingenuity.

Those, with the fineness of their souls,
By reason guide his execution. Shakspeare.

4. Purity; freedom from dross or base mixtures.

Our works are, indeed, nought else
But the protractive tryals of great Jove,
To find persistive constancy in men;
The fineness of which metal is not found
In fortune's love. Shakspeare.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals; as whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height: but when they come to such a fineness as serveth the ordinary use, they try no farther. Bacon.

The ancients were careful to coin their money in due weight and fineness; only in times of exigence they have diminished both the weight and fineness. Arbuthnot.

FI'NER, fi'nûr.[98] n. s. [from fine.] One who purifies metals.

Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer. Proverbs.

FI'NERY, fi'nûr-ê.[557] n. s. [from fine.] Show; splendour of appearance; gayety of colours.

Dress up your houses and your images,
And put on all the city's finery,
To consecrate this day a festival. Southern.

The capacities of a lady are sometimes apt to fall short in cultivating cleanliness and finery together. Swift.

Don't chuse your place of study by the finery of the prospects, or the most various scenes of sensible things. Watts.

They want to grow rich in their trades, and to maintain their families in some such figure and degree of finery, as a reasonable christian life has no occasion for. Law.

FINE'SSE, fê-nês'.[196] n. s. [Fr.] Artifice; stratagem: an unnecessary word which is creeping into the language.

A circumstance not much to be stood upon, in case it were not upon some finesse. Hayward

FI'NGER, fing'gûr.[381] n. s. [ꝼinger, Sax.; from fangen, to hold.]

1. The flexible member of the hand by which men catch and hold.

The fingers and thumb in each hand consist of fifteen bones, there being three to each finger. Quincy.

You seem to understand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying
Upon her skinny lips. Shakspeare.

Diogenes, who is never said,
For aught that ever I could read,
To whine, put finger i' th' eye, and sob,
Because h' had ne'er another tub. Hudibras.

The hand is divided into four fingers bending forward, and one opposite to them bending backward, and of greater strength than any of them singly, which we call the thumb, to join with them severally united; whereby it is fitted to lay hold of objects of any size or quantity. Ray.

A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes of the world, and making every one sound a particular note. Keil.

Poor Peg sewed, spun, and knit for a livelihood, 'till her finger ends were sore. Arbuthnot.

2. A small measure of extension; the breadth of a finger.

Go now, go trust the wind's uncertain breath,
Remov'd four fingers from approaching death;
Or seven at most, when thickest is the board.
Dryden.

One of these bows with a little arrow did pierce through a piece of steel three fingers thick.
Wilkins.

3. The hand; the instrument of work; manufacture; art.

Fool, that forgets her stubborn look,
This softness from thy finger took. Waller.

To FI'NGER, fing'gûr. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To touch lightly; to toy with.

Go, get you gone, and let the papers lie;
You would be fingering them to anger me. Shaksp.

One that is covetous is not so highly pleased with the mere sight and fingering of money, as with the thoughts of his being considered as a wealthy man. Grew.

2. To touch unseasonably or thievishly.

His ambition would needs be fingering the sceptre, and hoisting him into his father's throne.
South.

3. To touch an instrument of musick.

She hath broke the lute;
I did but tell her she mistook her frets,
And bow'd her hand to teach her fingering. Shaksp.

4. To perform any work exquisitely with the fingers.

Not any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,
With this so curious net-work might compare.
Spenser.

FINGER-FERN, fing'gûr-fêrn. n. s. [finger and fern; asplenum, Lat.] A plant.

FINGER-STONE, fing'gûr-stône. n. s. [finger and stone; telenites, Lat.] A fossil resembling an arrow.

FI'NGLEFANGLE, fing'gl-fâng'gl. n. s. [from fangle.] A trifle: a burlesque word.

We agree in nothing but to wrangle
About the slightest finglefangle. Hudibras.

FI'NICAL, fin'ê-kâl. adj. [from fine.] Nice; foppish; pretending to superfluous elegance.

A whoreson, glassglazing, superserviceable, finical rogue. Shakspeare.

I cannot hear a finical fop romancing, how the king took him aside at such a time; what the queen said to him at another. L'Estrange.

FI'NICALLY, fin'ê-kâl-ê. adv. [from finical.] Foppishly.

FI'NICALNESS, fin'ê-kâl-nês. n. s. [from finical.] Superfluous nicety; foppery.

To FI'NISH, fin'ish. v. a. [finir, Fr.; finio, Lat.]

1. To bring to the end proposed; to complete.

As he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same grace. 2 Corinthians.

2. To make perfect.

A poet uses episodes; but episodes taken separately, finish nothing. Broome.

3. To perfect; to polish to the excellency intended.

Though here you all perfection should not find,
Yet is it all th' Eternal Will design'd;
It is a finish'd work, and perfect in his kind.
Blackmore.

I would make what bears your name, as finished as my last work ought to be; that is, more finished than the rest. Pope.

4. To end; to put an end to.

FI'NISHER, fin'ish-ûr. n. s. [from finish.]

1. Performer; accomplisher.

He that of greatest works is finisher,
Oft does them by the weakest minister. Shaksp.

2. One that puts an end; ender.

This was the condition of those times; the world against Athanasius, and Athanasius against it: half an hundred of years spent in doubtful trials which of the two, in the end, would prevail; the side which had all, or else that part which had no friend but God and death, the one a defender of his innocency, the other a finisher of all his troubles. Hooker.

3. One that completes or perfects.

The author and finisher of our faith. Hebrews.

O prophet of glad tidings! finisher
Of utmost hope! Milton.

FI'NITE, fi'nite.[126] adj. [finitus, Latin.] Limited; bounded; terminated.

Servius conceives no more thereby than a finite number for indefinite. Brown.

Finite of any magnitude holds not any proportion to infinite. Locke.

That supposed infinite duration, will by the very supposition, be limited at two extremes, though never so remote asunder, and consequently must needs be finite. Bentley.

FI'NITELESS, fi'nite-lês. adj. [from finite.] Without bounds; unlimited.

It is ridiculous unto reason, and finiteless as their desires. Brown.

FI'NITELY, fi'nite-lê. adv. [from finite.] Within certain limits; to a certain degree.

They are creatures still, and that sets them at an infinite distance from God; whereas all their excellencies can make them but finitely distant from us.
Stillingfleet.

FI'NITENESS, fi'nite-nês. n. s. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

I ought now to unbay the current of my passion, and love without other boundary than what is set by the finiteness of my natural powers. Norris.

FI'NITUDE, fin'ê-tûde. n. s. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries. This is hardly an authorized word.

Finitude, applied to natural or created things, imports the proportions of the several degress of affections, or properties of these things to one another; infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of affections, or properties. Cheyne.

FI'NLESS, fin'lês. adj. [from fin.] Wanting fins.

He angers me
With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
And of a dragon and a finless fish. Shaksp.

FI'NLIKE, fin'like. adj. [fin and like.] Formed in imitation of fins.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untaught Indian on the stream did glide;
Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or finlike oars did spread from either side. Dryden.

FI'NNED, fin'd.[362] adj. [from fin.] Having broad edges spread out on either side.

They plough up the turf with a broad finned plough. Mortimer.

FI'NNY, fin'nê. adj. [from fin.] Furnished with fins; formed for the element of water.

High o'er the main in wat'ry pomp he rides,
His azure car and finny coursers guides:
Proteus his name. Dryden.

New herds of beasts he sends the plains to share;
New colonies of birds to people air;
And to the oozy beds the finny fish repair. Dryden.

While black with storms the ruffled ocean rolls,
And from the fisher's art defends her finny sholes.
Blackmore.

With hairy springes we the birds betray;
Slight lines of hair surprise the finny prey. Pope.

Fi'ntoed, fin'tôde. adj. [fin and toe.] Palmipedous; having a membrane between the toes.

Such creatures as are whole footed, or fintoed, viz. some birds and quadrupeds, are naturally directed to go into the water and swim there. Ray.

Fi'nochio, fê-nô'shê-ô. n. s. A species of fennel.

Fi'pple, fîp'pl. n. s. [from fibula, Lat.] A stopper.

You must know, that in recorders, which go with a gentle breath, the concave of the pipe, were it not for the fipple that straiteneth the air much more than the simple concave, would yield no sound. Bacon.

Fir,[109] fêr. n. s. [fyrr, Welsh; furh, Sax. fyr, Danish.] The tree of which deal-boards are made.

It is ever green; the leaves are single, and for the most part produced on every side of the branches: the male flowers, or catkins, are placed at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are propagated on cones, which are squamose. Miller.

He covered the floor of the house with planks of fir. 1 Kings.

The spiring fir and stately box. Pope.

Fire, fire. n. s. [fyr, Saxon; fewr, German.]

1. The igneous element.

The force of fire ascended first on high,
And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky;
Then air succeeds, in lightness next to fire. Dryd.

2. Any thing burning.

A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench. Shakspeare.

Where two raging fires meet together,
They do consume the thing that feeds their fury. Shakspeare.

So contraries on Ætna's top conspire;
Here hoary frosts, and by them breaks out fire. Cowley.

3. A conflagration of towns or countries.

There is another liberality to the citizens, who had suffered damage by a great fire. Arbuthnot.

Though safe thou think'st thy treasure lies,
Conceal'd in chests from human eyes,
A fire may come, and it may be
Bury'd, my friend, as far from thee. Granville.

4. Flame; light; lustre.

Stars hide your fires!
Let not night see my black and deep desires. Shakspeare.

5. Torture by burning.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire,
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire? Prior.

6. The punishment of the damned.

Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? Isaiah.

7. Any thing provoking; any thing that inflames the passions.

Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorn so much? Shakspeare.

8. Ardour of temper; violence of passion.

He had fire in his temper and a German bluntness; and, upon provocations, might strain a phrase. Atterbury.

9. Liveliness of imagination; vigour of fancy; intellectual activity; force of expression; spirit of sentiment.

Nor can the snow that age does shed
Upon thy rev'rend head,
Quench or allay the noble fire within,
But all that youth can be thou art. Cowley.

They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words, and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure is good oratory and poetry to them. Felton.

He brings, to make us from our ground retire,
The reasoner's weapons and the poet's fire. Blackmore.

Exact Racine, and Corneille's noble fire,
Taught us that France had something to admire. Pope.

The bold Longinus all the nine inspire,
And warm the critick with a poet's fire. Pope.

Oh may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest of your sons inspire. Pope.

10. The passion of love.

Love various hearts does variously inspire,
It stirs in gentle bosoms gentle fire,
Like that of incense on the altar laid:
But raging flames tempestuous souls invade;
A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

The fire of love in youthful blood,
Like what is kindled in brush-wood,
But for a moment burns. Shadwell.

The god of love retires;
Dim are his torches, and extinct his fires. Pope.

New charms shall still increase desire,
And time's swift wing shall fan the fire. Moore.

11. Eruption or imposthumation: as, St. Anthony's fire.

12. To set Fire on, or set on Fire. To kindle; to inflame.

Fish-ponds are no small improvement of watry boggy lands. Mortimer.

Fish-ponds were made where former forests grew,
And hills were levell'd to extend the view. Prior.

After the great value the Romans put upon fishes, it will not appear incredible that C. Hirrius should sell his fish-ponds for quadragies H. S. 32,291*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Arbuthnot.

FI'SHER, fish'ûr.[98] n. s. from fish.] One who is employed in catching fish.

In our sight the three were taken up
By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought:
At length another seiz'd on us,
And would have reft the fishes of their prey,
Had not they been very slow o' sail. Shaksp.

We know that town is but with fishers fraught,
Where Theseus govern'd and where Plato taught. Sandys.

Lest he should suspect it, draw it from him,
As fishers do the bait, to make him follow it. Denham.

A soldier now he with his coat appears;
A fisher now, his trembling angle bears. Pope.

FI'SHERBOAT, fish'ûr-bôte. n. s. [fisher and boat.] A boat employed in catching fish.

FI'SHERMAN, fish'ûr-mân.[88] n. s. [fisher and man.] One whose employment and livelihood is to catch fish.

How fearful
And dizzy 'tis to cast one's eyes so low!
The fishermen that walk upon the beach
Appear like mice. Shaksp.

At length two monsters of unequal size,
Hard by the shore a fisherman espies. Waller.

Do scales and fins bear price to this excess?
You might have bought the fishermen for less. Dryden.

FI'SHERTOWN, fish'ûr-tôûn. n. s. [fisher and town.] A town inhabited by fishermen.

Others of them, in that time burned that fishertown Mousehole. Carew.

1. Properly; justly; reasonably.

Even so most fitly

As you malign our senators. Shakspeare.

Where a man cannot fitly play his own part, if he have not a friend, he may quit the stage. Bacon.

I cannot fitlier compare marriage than to a lottery; for, in both, he that ventures may succeed, and may miss; and if he draw a prize, he hath a rich return of his venture: but in both lotteries there lie pretty store of blanks for every prize. Boyle.

The whole of our duty may be expressed most fitly by departing from evil. Tillotson.

2. Commodiously; meetly.

To take a latitude,
Sun or stars are fitliest view'd
At their brightest; but to conclude
Of longitudes, what other way have we
But to mark when, and where the dark eclipses be. Donne.

An animal, in order to be moveable, must be flexible; and therefore is fitly made of separate and small solid parts, replete with proper fluids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FI'TMENT, fît'mênt. n. s. [from fit.] Something adapted to a particular purpose. Not used.

Poor beseeming, 'twas a fitment for
The purpose I then follow'd. Shakspeare.

FI'TNESS, fît'nês. n. s. [from fit.]

1. Propriety; meetness; justness; reasonableness.

In things the fitness whereof is not of itself apparent, nor easy to be made sufficiently manifest unto all, yet the judgment of antiquity, concurring with that which is received, may induce them to think it not unfit. Hooker.

The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness
That we adjourn this court. Shakspeare.

Wer't my fitness
To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They're apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones. Shakspeare.

2. Convenience; commodity; the state of being fit.

Nor time nor place
Did then cohere, and yet you would make both:
They've made themselves, and that their fitness now
Does unmake you. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

FI'TTER, fît'tûr. n. s. [from fit.]

1. The person or thing that confers fitness for any thing.

Sowing the sandy gravelly land in Devonshire and Cornwal with French furze seed, they reckon a great improver of their land, and a fitter of it for corn. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To FIX, fîks. v. a. [fixer, French, fixus, Latin.]

1. To make fast, firm, or stable.

Hell heard th' unsufferable noise, hell saw
Heav'n ruining from heav'n, and would have fled
Affrighted, but that fate had fix'd too deep
Her dark foundations, and too fast had bound. Milt.

2. To settle; to establish invariably.

Brightest seraph! tell
In which of all these orbs hath man
His fixed seat, or fixed seat hath none,
But all these shining orbs his choice to dwell! Milt.

One loves fixed laws, and the other arbitrary power. Temple.

When custom hath fixed his eating to certain stated periods, his stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour. Locke.

3. To direct without variation.

Why are thine eyes fixt to the sullen earth,
Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight?
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

Thus while the Trojan prince employs his eyes,
Fix'd on the walls with wonder and surprize. Dryd.

4. To deprive of volatility.

We pronounce concerning gold, that it is fixt. Locke.

5. To pierce; to transfix. A sense purely Latin.

While from the raging sword he vainly flies,
A bow of steel shall fix his trembling thighs. Sandys.

6. To withhold from motion.

To FIX, fîks. v. n.

1. To settle the opinion; to determine the resolution.

If we would be happy, we must fix upon some foundation that can never deceive us. L'Estrange.

He made himself their prey,
T' impose on their belief, and Troy betray;
Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent
To die undaunted, or to circumvent. Dryden.

Here hope began to dawn; resolv'd to try,
She fix'd on this her utmost remedy,
Death was behind; but hard it was to die. Dryden.

In most bodies not propagated by seed, it is the colour we must fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

2. To rest; to cease; to wander.

Your kindness banishes your fear,
Resolv'd to fix for ever here. Waller.

3. To lose volatility, so as to be malleable.

In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, and put quicksilver, wrapped in a piece of linen, in that hole, and the quicksilver will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer. Bacon's Natural History.

FIXA'TION, fîk-sâ'shûn. n. s. [French.]

1. Stability; firmness; steadiness.

Your fixation in matters of religion will not be more necessary for your soul's than your kingdom's peace. King Charles.

2. Residence in a certain place.

To light, created in the first day, God gave no proper place or fixation. Raleigh.

3. Confinement; forbearance of excursion.

They are subject to errors from a narrowness of soul, a fixation and confinement of thought to a few objects. Watts.

4. Want of volatility; destruction of volatility.

Upon the compound body three things are chiefly to be observed, the colour, the fragility or pliantness, and the volatility or fixation, compared with the simple bodies. Bacon.

It is more difficult to make gold of other metals less ponderous and less materiate, than to make silver of lead or quicksilver, both which are more ponderous than silver; so that they need rather a degree of fixation than any condensation. Bacon.

5. Reduction from fluidity to firmness.

Salt dissolved upon a fixation returns to its affected cubes. Glanville.

FI'XEDLY, fîk'sêd-lê.[364] adv. [from fixed.]

1. Certainly; firmly; in a manner settled and established.

If we pretend that the distinction of species, or sorts, is fixedly established by the real and secret constitutions of things. Locke.

2. Steadfastly.

Omnipotency, omnisciency, and infinite goodness enlarge the spirit, while it fixtly looks on them. Burnet.

FI'XEDNESS, fîk'sêd-nês.[365] n. s. [from fixed.]

1. Stability; firmness.

2. Want or loss of volatility.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex idea signified by the word gold. Locke.

3. Solidity; coherence of parts.

Fluid or solid comprehend all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentley.

4. Steadiness; settled opinion or resolution.

A fixedness in religion will not give my conscience leave to consent to innovations. K. Charles.

FIXI'DITY, fîk-sid'ê-tê. n. s. [from fixed.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility. A word of Boyle.

Bodies mingled by the fire are differing as to the fixidity and volatility; and yet are so combined by the first operation of the fire, that itself does scarce afterwards separate them. Boyle.

FI'XITY, fîk'sê-tê. n. s. [fixite, Fr.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility.

And are not the sun and fixed stars great earths vehemently hot, whose heat is conserved by the greatness of the bodies, and the mutual action and reaction between them, and the light which they emit, and whose parts are kept from fuming away, not only by their fixity, but also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them? Newton's Opticks.

FI'XTURE, fîks'tshûre.[463] n. s. [from fix.]

1. Position.

The fixture of her eye hath motion in 't,
As we were mock'd with art. Shakspeare.

2. Stable pressure.

The firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gate. Shakspeare.

3. Firmness; stable state.

Frights, changes, horrours,
Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married calm of states
Quite from their fixture. Shakspeare.

FI'ZGIG, fîz'gîg. n. s. A kind of dart or harpoon with which seamen strike fish.

Can'st thou with fizgigs pierce him to the quick,
Or in his skull thy barbed trident stick? Sandys.

FLA'BBY, flâb'bê. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Soft; not firm; easily shaking or yielding to the touch.

Paleness, a weak pulse, palpitations of the heart, flabby and black flesh, are symptoms of weak fibres. Arbuthnot.

Pulls out the rags contriv'd to prop
Her flabby dugs, and down they drop. Swift.

FLA'BILE, flâb'bîle. adj. [flabilis, Latin.] Blown about by the wind; subject to be blown. Dict.

FLA'CCID, flâk'sîd. adj. [flaccidus, Lat.] Weak; limber; not stiff; lax; not tense.

The bowing and inclining the head is found in the great flower of the sun: the cause I take to be is, that the part against which the sun beateth, waxeth more faint and flaccid in the stalk, and thereby less able to support the flower. Bacon.

They whose muscles are weak or flaccid, are unapt to pronounce the letter r. Holder.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as he finds the fibres are too flaccid and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbuthnot.

FLACCI'DITY, flăk-sĭd'ĕ-tē. n. s. [from flaccid.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension; want of stiffness.

There is neither fluxion nor pain, but flaccidity joined with insensibiltty. Wiseman's Surgery.

To FLAG, flăg. v. n. [flaggeren, Dutch; ꝑleoꝛan, Saxon, to fly.]

1. To hang loose without stiffness or tension.

Beds of cotton wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives, and children lie together. Abbot.

The jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night,
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings,
Clip dead men's graves. Shaksp.

It keeps those slender aereal bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibleness and weight, would flag or curl. Boyle.

Like a fiery meteor sunk the sun,
The promise of a storm; the shifting gales
Forsake by fits, and fill the flagging sails. Dryden.

2. To grow spiritless or dejected.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
Like fowl in air too damp, and lags along
As if she were a body in a body:
My senses too are dull and stupify'd,
Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches. Dryd.

3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.

Juice in language is somewhat less than blood: for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, flaggy, poor, starved, scarce covering the bone, and shews like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good. Ben Jonson.

His stomach will want victuals at the usual hour, either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite. Locke.

Fame, when it is once at a stand, naturally flags and languishes. Addison.

If on sublimer wings of love and praise,
My love above the starry vault I raise,
Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
I flag, I drop, and flutter in the dust. Arbuthnot.

He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches 'till it begins to flag: he goes about watching when to devour us. Swift.

The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel inroads from the spleen. Swift.

To FLAG, flăg. v. a.

1. To let fall into feebleness; to suffer to droop.

Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;
As well as Cupid, time is blind;
Soon must those glories of thy face
The fate of vulgar beauty find;
The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,
Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die. Prior.

2. [from flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.

The sides and floor were all flagged with excellent marble. Sandys.

A white stone used for flagging floors. Woodward.

FLAG, flăg. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A water plant with a bladed leaf and yellow flower, so called from its motion in the wind.

She took an ark of bulrushes, and laid it in the flags by the river's brink. Exodus.

Can bulrushes but by the river grow?
Can flags there flourish where no waters flow? Sandys.

There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flags or stones. Walton.

Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds. Mortimer.

2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land-forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.

These flags of France that are advanced here,
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endamagement. Shak.

He hangs out as many flags as he descryeth vessels; square, if ships; if gallies, pendants. Sandys.

Democracies are less subject to sedition than where there are stirps of nobles; for if men's eyes are upon the persons, it is for the business sake as fittest, and not for flags of pedigree. Bacon.

Let him be girt
With all the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron,
Harpies and hydras, or all the monstrous forms
'Twixt Africa and Inde, I'll find him out,
And force him to restore his purchase back,
Or drag him by the curls to a foul death. Milton.

The French and Spaniards, when your flags appear,
Forget their hatred, and consent to fear. Waller.

The interpretation of that article about the flag, is a ground at pleasure for opening a war. Temple.

In either's flag the golden serpents bear,
Erecting crests alike, like volumes rear,
And mingle friendly hissings in the air. Dryden.

Then they, whose mothers, frantick with their fear,
In woods and wilds the flags of Bacchus bear,
And lead his dances with dishevell'd hair. Dryden.

3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements. [flache, old French.]

Part of two flags striated, but deeper on one side than the other. Woodward.

Flagstone will not split, as slate does, being found formed into flags or thin plates, which are no other than so many strata. Woodward.

FLAG-BROOM, flăg'brōōm. n. s. [from flag and broom.] A broom for sweeping flags or pavements, commonly made of birch-twigs, or of the leaves of the dwarf palm, imported from Spain.

Play us a lesson on your flagelet. Moore.

FLAGELLA'TION, flădje'ĕl-lā'shŭn. n. s. [from flagello, Lat.] The use of the scourge.

By Bridewell all descend,
As morning pray'r and flagellation end. Garth.

FLA'GGINESS, flăg'gē-nĕs. n. s. [from flaggy.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension.

FLA'GGY, flăg'gē.[383] adj. [from flag.]

1. Weak; lax; limber; not stiff; not tense.

His flaggy wings when forth he did display,
Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind
Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way. F. Queen.

That basking in the sun thy bees may lye,
And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry. Dryd.

2. Weak in taste; insipid.

Graft an apple-cion upon the stock of a colewort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple. Bacon.

FLAGI'TIOUS, flă-jĭsh'ŭs. adj. [from flagitius, Lat.]

1. Wicked; villainous; atrocious.

No villainy or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.

There's no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline. L'Estrange.

First, those flagitious times,
Pregnant with unknown crimes,
Conspire to violate the nuptial bed. Roscommon.

Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it. Addison.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain,
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a dearth in these flagitious times. Pope.

2. Guilty of crimes.

He dies, sad outcast of each church and state,
And, harder still, flagitious yet not great. Pope.

FLAGI'TIOUSNESS, flă-jĭsh'ŭs-nĕs. n. s. [from flagitious.] Wickedness; villainy.

FLA'GON, flăg'ŭn.[166] n. s. [flacced, Welsh, ꝑlaxe, Saxon; flaske, Danish; flacon, French; flasco, Italian; flasco, Spanish.] A vessel of drink with a narrow mouth.

A mad rogue! he poured a flagon of rhenish on my head once. Shaksp.

More had sent him by a suitor in chancery two silver flagons. Bacon.

Did they coin pisspots, bowls, and flagons
Int' officers of horse and dragoons? Hudibras.

His trusty flagon, full of potent juice,
Was hanging by, worn thin with age and use. Roscommon.

One flaggon walks the round, that none should think
They either change, or stint him in his drink. Dryden.

FLA'GRANCY, flā'grăn-sē. n. s. [flagrantia, Lat.] Burning; heat; fire.

Lust causeth a flagrancy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts. Bacon.

FLA'GRANT, flā'grănt. adj. [flagrans, Lat.]

1. Ardent; burning; eager. It is always used figuratively.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight; stirreth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain. Hooker.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Sapho, at her toilet's greasy task,
Then issuing flagrant to an evening mask:
So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope.

3. Red; imprinted red.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.

4. Notorious; flaming into notice.

When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself; and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation. Swift.

With equal poize let steady justice sway,
And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;
But, 'till the proofs are clear, the stroke delay.
Smith.

FLAGRA'TION, flâ-grâ'shûn. n. s. [flagro, Lat.] Burning. Dict.

FLA'GSTAFF, flâg'stâf. n. s. [flag and staff.] The staff on which the flag is fixed.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,
On wings of all the winds to combat flies:
His murdering guns a loud defiance roar,
And bloody crosses on his flagstaffs rise. Dryden.

FLAIL, flâle.[202] n. s. [flagellum, Latin; flagel, German.] The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear; the tool of the thrasher.

Our soldiers, like the night-owl's lazy flight,
Or like a lazy thresher with a flail,
Fell gently down as if they struck their friends.
Shaksp.

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail had thresh'd the corn,
That ten-days labourers could not end. Milton.

In this pile shall reign a mighty prince,
Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense. Dryd.

The dextrous handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder Gideon's and Cincinnatus's skill in arms and government. Locke.

The thresher, Duck, could o'er the queen prevail;
The proverb says, no fence against a flail. Swift.

FLAKE, flâke. n. s. [floccus, Lat.]

1. Any thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

Crimson circles like red flakes in the element, when the weather is hottest. Sidney.

And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd, and almost made affear'd.
Fairy Queen.

The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice. Burnet.

Small drops of a misling rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles, which being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow. Grew.

Upon throwing in a stone, the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up. Addison.

2. A stratum; layer; film; lamina.

The flakes of his tough flesh so firmly bound,
As not to be divorced by a wound. Sandys.

The teeth cut away great flakes of the metal, till it receiveth the perfect form the teeth would make. Moxon.

To FLAKE, flâke. v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

From the bleak pole no winds inclement blow,
Mold the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow. Pope.

To FLAKE, flâke. v. n. To break into laminæ; to part in loose bodies.

FLAK'Y, flâ'kê. adj. [from flake.]

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the east. Shaksp.

The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,
With sparks that seem to set the world on fire.
Pope.

Hence, when the snows in winter cease to weep,
And undissolv'd their flaky texture keep,
The banks with ease their humble streams contain,
Which swell in summer, and those banks disdain.
Blackmore.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminæ.

FLAM, flâm. n. s. [A cant word of no certain etymology.] A falsehood; a lie; an illusory pretext.

A flam more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old aruspicy and aug'ry. Hudibras.

'Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary, are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion. South.

What are most of the histories of the world but lyes? Lyes immortalized and consigned over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity. South.

To FLAM, flâm. v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive with a lie. Merely cant.

For so our ignorance was flamm'd,
To damn ourselves t' avoid being damn'd. Hudib.

God is not to be flammed off with lies, who knows exactly what thou can'st do, and what not. South.

FLA'MBEAU, flâm'bô.[245] n. s. [French.] A lighted torch.

The king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy. Dryden.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death. Addison.

FLAME, flâme. n. s. [flamma, Latin; flamme, French.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is, so hot as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame. Newton.

What flame, what lightning e'er
So quick an active force did bear? Cowley.

2. Fire.

Jove! Prometheus' theft allow;
The flames he once stole from thee, grant him now.
Cowley.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest fame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame;
In both our English genius is exprest,
Lofty and bold, but negligently drest. Waller.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smit with the love of kindred arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame.
Pope.

5. Passion of love.

My heart, on flame, and does like fire
To her aspire. Cowley.

Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove
All the extremities of love. Cowley.

No warning of the approaching flame;
Swiftly like sudden death it came:
I lov'd the moment I beheld. Granville.

To FLAME, flâme, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? Shaksp.

He fell flaming through th' ethereal sky
To bottomless perdition. Milton.

Hell all around
As one great furnace flam'd. Milton.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing sable for the peaceful night. Prior.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

FLAMECO'LOURED, flâme'kûl-lûr'd.[362] adj. [flame and colour.] Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferent well in flame-coloured stockings Shaksp.

August shall bear the form of a young man of a fierce and cholerick aspect, in a flamecoloured garment. Peacham.

FLA'MEN, flâ'mên.[503] n. s. [Latin.] A priest; one that officiates in solemn offices.

Then first the flamen tasted living food;
Next his grim idol smear'd with human blood. Pope.

FLAMMABI'LITY, flâm-mâ-bîl'ê-tê. n. s. [flamma, Lat.] The quality of admitting to be set on fire, so as to blaze.

In the sulphur of bodies torrified, that is the oily, fat, and unctuous parts, consist the principles of flammability. Brown.

FLAMMA'TION, flâm-mâ'shûn. n. s [flammatio, Lat.] The act of setting on flame.

White or crystaline arsenick, being artificial and sublimed with salt, will not endure flammation. Brown.

FLA'MY, flâ'mê. adj. [from flame.]

1. Inflamed; burning; blazing.

My thoughts imprison'd in my secret woes,
With flamy breaths do issue oft in sound. Sidney.

2. Having the nature of flame.

The vital spirits of living creatures are a substance compounded of an airy and flamy matter; and though air and flame, being free, will not well mingle, yet bound in by a body they will. Bacon.

FLANK, flânk. n. s. [flanc, French, according to Menage, from λαγων; more probably from latus, Lat.]

1. That part of the side of a quadruped near the hinder thigh.

The belly shall be eminent by shadowing the flank. Peacham.

2. [In men.] The lateral part of the lower belly.

He said, and pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent:
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corslet pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downward near his flank descends.
Pope.

3. The side of any army or fleet.

Great ordnance and small shot thundered and showered upon our men from their rampier in front, and from the gallies that lay at sea in flank. Bacon.

Gray was appointed to stand on the left side, in such sort as he might take the flank of the enemy. Hayward.

To right and left the front
Divided, and to either flank retir'd. Milton.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the bastion which reaches from the curtain to the face, and defends the opposite face, the flank and the curtain. Harris.

To FLANK, flânk. v. a.

1. To attack the side of a battalion or fleet.

2. To be posted so as to overlook or command any pass on the side.

With fates averse against their king's command,
Arm'd on the right, and on the left they stand,
And flank the passage. Dryden.

3. To secure on the side.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,

Which, flank'd with rocks, did close in covert lay. Dryden.

FLA'NKER, flånk'ûr. n. s. [from flank.] A fortification jutting out so as to command the side of a body marching to the assault.

The Turks, discouraged with the loss of their fellows, and sore beaten by the Spaniards out of their flankers, were enforced to retire. Knolles.

Like storms of hail the stones fell down from high,
Cast from the bulwarks, flankers, ports, and towers. Fairfax.

To FLA'NKER, flånk'ûr. v. a. [flanquer, Fr.] To defend by lateral fortifications.

FLA'NNEL, flân'nêl.[99] n. s. [gwlanen, Welsh; from gwlan, wool, Davies.] A soft nappy stuff of wool.

FLAP, flåp. n. s. [lœppe, Sax.]

1. Any thing that hangs broad and loose, fastened only by one side.

There is a peculiar provision for the windpipe, that is, a cartilaginous flap upon the opening of the larynx, which hath an open cavity for the admission of the air. Brown.

Some surgeons make a crucial incision, upon the supposition that the wound would more easily heal by turning down the flaps. Sharp.

2. The motion of any thing broad and loose.

3. A disease in horses.

When a horse has the flaps, you may perceive his lips swelled on both sides of his mouth; and that which is in the blisters is like the white of an egg: cut some slashes with a knife, and rub it once with salt and it will cure. Farrier's Dict.

To FLAP, flåp. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a flap, as flies are beaten.

A hare, hard put to it by an eagle, took sanctuary in a ditch with a beetle: the eagle flapt off the former, and devoured the other. L'Estrange.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, that stinks and stings. Pope.

2. To move with a flap or noise made by the stroke of any thing broad.

With fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions oft to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound. Philips.

Three times all in the dead of night,
A bell was heard to ring;
And shrieking at her window thrice
The raven flapp'd his wing. Tickel.

To FLAP, flåp. v. n.

1. To ply the wings with noise.

'Tis common for a duck to run flapping and fluttering away, as if maimed, to carry people from her young. L'Estrange.

The dire flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, disheartened him in the duel. Dryden.

2. To fall with flaps or broad parts depending.

When suffocating mists obscure the morn,
Let thy worst wig, long us'd to storms be worn;
This knows the powder'd footman, and with care
Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair. Gay.

FLA'PDRAGON, flåp'drâg-ûn. n. s. [from a dragon supposed to breathe fire.]

1. A play in which they catch raisins out of burning brandy, and extinguishing them by closing the mouth, eat them.

2. The thing eaten at flapdragon.

He plays at coits well, and eats conger and fennel, and drinks candles ends for flapdragons, and rides the wild mare with the boys. Shaksp.

To FLA'PDRAGON, flåp'drâg-ûn. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow; to devour. Low cant.

But to make an end of the ship, to see how the sea flapdragoned it. Shaksp.

FLA'PEARED, flåp'êêr'd.[362] adj. [flap and ear.] Having loose and broad ears.

A whoreson, beetle-headed flapeared knave. Shakspeare.

1. To flutter with a splendid show.

She shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribbands pendand flaring 'bout her head. Shaksp.

2. To glitter with transient lustre.

Doctrine and life, colours, and light in one
When they combine and mingle, bring
A strong regard and awe; but speech alone
Doth vanish like a flaring thing,
And in the ear, not conscience, ring. Herbert.

3. To glitter offensively.

When the sun begins to fling
His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
To arched walks of twilight groves. Milton.

4. To be in too much light.

I cannot stay
Flaring in sunshine all the day. Prior.

FLASH, flâsh. n. s. [φλὸξ, Minshew.]

1. A sudden, quick, transitory blaze.

When the cross blue lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heav'n, I did present myself
Ev'n in the aim and very flash of it. Shaksp.

We see a flash of a piece is seen sooner than the noise is heard. Bacon.

One with a flash begins, and ends in smoak;
The other out of smoak brings glorious light. Roscommon.

And as Ægeon, when with heaven he strove,
Defy'd the forky lightning from afar,
At fifty mouths his flaming breath expires,
And flash for flash returns, and fires for fires. Dryden.

2. Sudden burst of wit or merriment.

Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar? Shaksp.

Wicked men prefer the light flashes of a wanton mirth, which for a while suspend reflection, and hide the sinner from himself, to such discourses as awaken conscience. Rogers.

3. A short transient state.

The Persians and Macedonians had it for a flash. Bacon.

4. A body of water driven by violence.

To FLASH, flâsh. v. n.

1. To glitter with a quick and transient flame.

This salt powdered, and put into a crucible, was, by the injection of well kindled charcoal, made to flash divers times, almost like melted nitre. Boyle.

2. To burst out into any kind of violence.

By day and night he wrongs me; ev'ry hour
He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds. Shaksp.

3. To break out into wit, merriment, or bright thought.

They flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought. Felton.

To FLASH, flâsh. v. a. To strike up large bodies of water from the surface.

With his raging arms he rudely flash'd
The waves about, and all his armour swept,
That all the blood and filth away was wash'd. Fairy Queen.

If the sea-water be flashed with a stick or oar, the same casteth a shining colour, and the drops resemble sparkles of fire. Carew.

FLA'SHER, flâsh'ûr. n. s. [from flash.] A man of more appearance of wit than reality. Dict.

FLA'SHILY, flâsh'ê-lê. adv. [from flashy.] With empty show; without real power of wit, or solidity of thought.

FLA'SHY, flâsh'ê. adj. [from flash.]

1. Empty; not solid, showy without substance.

Flashy wits cannot fathom the whole extent of a large discourse. Digby.

When they list; their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw. Milton.

This mean conceit, this darling mystery,
Which thou think'st nothing, friend! thou shalt not buy;
Nor will I change for all the flashy wit. Dryden.

2. [from flaccidus, Skinner.] Insipid; without force or spirit.

Distilled books are, like common distilled waters, flashy things. Bacon.

The tastes that most offend in fruits, herbs, and roots, are bitter, harsh, sour, waterish, or flashy. Bacon.

FLASK, flâsk. n. s. [flasque; French.]

The silver stands with golden flaskets grac'd. Pope's Odyssey.

FLAT, flât. adj. [plat, French.]

1. Horizontally level without inclination.

Thou all shaking thunder,
Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world. Shak.

Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon
Were in the flat sea sunk. Milton.

The houses are flat roofed to walk upon, so that every bomb that fell on them would take effect. Addison.

2. Smooth; without protuberances.

In the dawning of the next day we might plainly discern it was land flat to our sight, and full of boscage. Bacon.

3. Not elevated; fallen; not erect.

Cease t' admire, and beauty's plumes
Fall flat, and shrink into a trivial toy,
At every sudden slighting quite abasht. Milton.

4. Level with the ground.

In them is plainest taught, and easiest learnt,
What makes a nation happy, and keeps it so,
What ruins kingdoms, and lays cities flat. Milton.

That Christ-church stands above ground, and that the church of Westminster lies not flat upon it, is your lordship's commendation. South.

5. Lying prostrate; lying along.

The wood-born people fall before her flat,
And worship her as goddess of the wood. F. Queen.

That lamentable wound,
Which laid that wretched prince flat on the ground. Daniel.

6. [In painting.] Wanting relief; wanting prominence of the figures.

7. Tasteless; insipid; dead.

He like a puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece. Shaksp.

Taste so divine! that what of sweet before
Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this and harsh. Milton.

The miry fields
Rejoicing in rich mold, most ample fruit
Of beauteous form produce; pleasing to sight,
But to the tongue inelegant and flat. Philips.

8. Dull; unanimated; frigid.

Short speeches fly about like darts, and are thought to be shot out of secret intentions; but as for large discourses, they are flat things, and not so much noted. Bacon.

Some short excursions of a broken vow
He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff. Dryden.

9. Depressed; spiritless; dejected.

I feel my genial spirits droop,
My hopes all flat, nature within me seems
In all her functions weary of herself. Milton.

10. Unpleasing; tasteless.

How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world! Shaksp.

To one firmly persuaded of the reality of heavenly happiness, and earnestly desirous of obtaining it, all earthly satisfactions must needs look little, and grow flat and unsavoury. Atterbury.

11. Peremptory; absolute; downright.

His horse with flat tiring taught him that discreet stays make speedy journeys. Sidney.

It is a flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted; for true justice punisheth nothing but the evil act or wicked word. Spenser.

As it is in the nature of all men to love liberty, so they become flat libertines, and fall to all licentiousness. Spenser.

You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes;
Those prisoners you shall keep:
——I will, that 's flat. Shaksp.

Thus repuls'd, our final hope
Is flat despair: we must exasperate
Th' almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
And that must end us. Milton.

If thou sin in wine or wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Frailty gets pardon by submissiveness,
But he that boasts, shuts that out of his story,
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his meer clod of earth, the spacious sky. Herbert.

You had broke and robb'd his house,
And stole his talismanique louse;
And all his new-found old inventions,
With flat felonious intentions. Hudibras.

12. Not shrill; not acute; not sharp in sound.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle. Bacon.

The upper end of the windpipe is endued with several cartilages and muscles to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp. Ray.

FLAT, flât. n. s.

1. A level; an extended plain.

The strings of a lute, viol, or virginals, give a far greater sound, by reason of the knot, board and concave underneath, than if there were nothing but only the flat of a board to let in the upper air into the lower. Bacon.

Because the air receiveth great tincture from the earth, expose flesh or fish, both upon a stake of wood some height above the earth, and upon the flat of the earth. Bacon.

It comes near an artificial miracle to make divers distinct eminences appear a flat by force of shadows, and yet the shadows themselves not to appear. Wotton.

He has cut the side of the rock into a flat for a garden; and by laying on it the waste earth, that he has found in several of the neighbouring parts, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit. Addison.

2. Even ground; not mountainous.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
'Till of this flat a mountain you have made,
T' o'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shaksp.

The way is ready and not long,
Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
Fast by a mountain. Milton.

3. A smooth low ground exposed to inundations.

The ocean overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'erbears your officers. Shaksp.

All the infections that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall. Shaksp.

Half my pow'rs this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
These Lincoln washes have devoured them. Shak.

4. Shallow; strand; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shaksp.

The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through so many flats and sands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Raleigh

Having newly left these grammatick flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, they are now turmoiled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy. Milton.

Full in the prince's passage hills of sand,
And dang'rous flats, in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And seamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryd.

Must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.

5. The broad side of a blade.

A darted mandate came
From that great will which moves this mighty frame,
Bid me to thee, my royal charge, repair,
To guard thee from the dæmons of the air;
My flaming sword above 'em to display,
All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
The flat to sweet the visions from thy mind,
The edge to cut 'em through that stay behind. Dryd.

6. Depression of thought or language.

Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when 'tis evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.

7. A surface without relief, or prominences.

Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills? Bentley.

To FLAT, flât. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To level; to depress; to make broad and smooth.

The ancients say, if you take two twigs of several fruit-trees, and flat them on the sides, and bind them close, and set them in the ground, they will come up in one stock. Bacon.

With horrid shapes she does her sons expose,
Distends their swelling lips, and flats their nose. Creech.

2. To make vapid.

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight four foot deep within the earth, though in a moist place and rainy time, were become a little harder than they were; otherwise fresh in their colour, but their juice somewhat flatted. Bacon.

To FLAT, flât. v. n.

1. To grow flat: opposed to swell.

I burnt it a second time, and observed the skin shrink, and the swelling to flat yet more than at first. Temple.

2. To render unanimated or evanid.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

FLA'TLONG, flât'lông. adv. [flat and long.] With the flat downward; not edgewise.

What a blow was there given?
—An it had not fallen flatlong. Shaksp.

To yield him more obedience, or support. Daniel.

Unjust, thou say'st
Flatly unjust, to bind with laws the free. Milton.

Not any interpreters allow it to be spoken of such as flatly deny the being of God; but of them that believing his existence, seclude him from directing the world. Bentley.

FLA'TNESS, flât'nês. n. s. [from flat.]

1. Evenness; level extension.
2. Want of relief or prominence.

It appears so very plain and uniform, that one would think the coiner looked on the flatness of a figure, as one of the greatest beauties in sculpture. Addison.

3. Deadness; insipidity; vapidness.

Deadness or flatness in cyder is often occasioned by the too free admission of air into the vessel. Mortimer.

4. Dejection of fortune.

The emperor of Russia was my father,
Oh, that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter's trial! that he did but see
The flatness of my misery! Shaksp.

5. Dejection of mind; want of life; want of spirit.

How fast does obscurity, flatness, and impertinency flow in upon our meditations! 'Tis a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses. Collier.

6. Dulness; insipidity; frigidity.

Some of Homer's translators have swelled into fustian, and others sunk into flatness. Pope.

7. The contrary to shrillness or acuteness of sound.

Take two saucers, and strike the edge of the one against the bottom of the other within a pail of water, and you shall find the sound groweth more flat, even while part of the saucer is above the water; but that flatness of sound is joined with a harshness. Bacon.

To FLA'TTEN, flât't'n.[405] v. a. [flatir, Fr. from flat.]

1. To make even or level, without prominence or elevation.

I scorn to flatter you or any man. Newton.

2. To praise falsely.

Flatter'd crimes of a licentious age,
Provoke our censure. Young.

3. To please; to sooth. This sense is purely Gallick.

A consort of voices supporting themselves by their different parts makes a harmony, pleasingly fills the ears, and flatters them. Dryden.

4. To raise false hopes.

He, always vacant, always amiable,
Hopes thee, of flatt'ring gales
Unmindful. Milton.

FLA'TTERER, flåt'tûr-rûr. n. s. [from flatter.] One who flatters; a fawner; a wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleasing falsities.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered. Shaksp.

Some praises proceed merely of flattery; and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man: if he be a cunning flatterer, he will follow the arch flatterer, which is a man's self. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective, and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to perforce. Bacon.

If we from wealth to poverty descend,
Want gives to know the flatt'rer from the friend. Dryden.

After treating her like a goddess, the husband uses her like a woman: what is still worse, the most abject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants. Addison.

The publick should know this: yet whoever goes about to inform them, shall be censured for a flatterer. Swift.

FLA'TTERY, flåt'tûr-è.[557] n. s. [from flatter; flatterie, Fr.] False praise; artful obsequiousness; adulation.

Minds, by nature great, are conscious of their greatness,
And hold it mean to borrow aught from flattery. Rowe.

Simple pride for flattery makes demands. Pope.

See how they beg an alms of flattery!
They languish, O! support them with a lye. Young.

FLA'TTISH, flåt'tîsh. adj. [from flat.] Somewhat flat; approaching to flatness.

These are from three inches over to six or seven, and of a flattish shape. Woodward.

Vegetable substances contain a great deal of air, which expands itself, producing all the disorders of flatulency. Arbuthnot.

2. Emptiness; vanity; levity; airiness.

Whether most of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to, may be determined by any that considers the natural flatulency of that airy scheme of notions. Glanville.

FLA'TULENT, flåtsh'û-lênt. adj. [flatulentus, flatus, Lat.]

1. Turgid with air; windy.

Pease are mild and demulcent; but being full of ærial particles are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion. Arbuthnot.

Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger; but readily return, by their elasticity, to a tumid state again. Quincy.

2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.

To talk of knowledge, from those few indistinct representations which are made to our grosser faculties, is a flatulent vanity. Glanville.

How many of these flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works. Dryden.

FLATUO'SITY, flåtsh-û-ôs-è'tè. n. s. [flatuosité, Fr.; from flatus, Lat.] Windiness; fulness of air.

The cause is flatuosity; for wind stirred, moveth to expel: and all purgers have in them a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach and belly. Bacon.

FLA'TUOUS, flåtsh'û-ûs. adj. [from flatus, Lat.] Windy; full of wind.

Rhubarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, doth digest and overcome, being not flatuous nor loathsome; and so sendeth it to the mesentery veins, and, being opening, it helpeth down urine. Bacon.

FLA'TUS, flå'tûs. n. s. [Latin.] Wind gathered in any cavities of the body, caused by indigestion and a gross internal perspiration; which is therefore discussed by warm aromaticks. Quincy.

FLA'TWISE, flåt'wize. adj. [flat and wise: so it should be written, not flatways.] With the flat downwards; not the edge.

Its posture in the earth was flatwise, and parellel to the site of the stratum in which it was reposited. Woodward.

To FLAUNT, flånt.[214] v. n.

1. To make a fluttering show in apparel.

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton.

These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently enough fain to immolate their own desires to their vanity. Boyle.

Here, attir'd beyond our purse, we go,
For useless ornament and flaunting show:
We take on trust, in purple robes to shine,
And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine. Dryden.

You sot, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-gilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family. Arbuthnot.

2. To be hung with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper: the words flaunt and flutter might with more propriety have changed their places.

Fortune in men has some small diff'rence made;
One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade. Pope.

FLAUNT, flånt. n. s. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble,
Wildly bound up, what would he say! or how
Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold
The sternness of his presence! Shakspeare.

FLA'VOUR, flå'vûr.[314] n. s.

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early. Addison.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blushing rose,
With bending heaps, so nigh their bloom disclose,
Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows. Dryden.

FLA'VOROUS, flå'vûr-ûs.[557] adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degen'rate there, and fruits declin'd
From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind. Dryden.

2. Fragrant; odorous.

FLAW, flåw. n. s. [φλάω, to break; ƿloh, Saxon, a fragment.]

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws
Or ere I weep. Shakspeare.

Wool, new-shorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw, and had not the bung-hole open. Bacon.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw. Boyle.

A flaw is in thy ill-bak'd vessel found:
'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound. Dryden.

As if great Atlas, from his height,
Should sink beneath his heavenly weight;
And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall, as once it shall,
Should gape immense, and rushing down, o'erwhelm this nether ball. Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
Or some frail china jar receive a flaw. Pope.

He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin. Swift.

2. A fault; defect; something that weakens or invalidates.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scriveners and brokers do value unsound men to serve their own turn. Bacon.

Traditions were a proof alone,
Could we be certain such they were, so known;
But since some flaws in long descents may be,
They make not truth but probability. Dryden.

And laid her dowry out in law,
To null her jointure with a flaw. Hudibras.

Their judgment has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires. Addison.

So many flaws had this vow in its first conception. Atterbury.

3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from flo, Lat.] Obsolete.

Being incens'd, he 's flint;
As humorous as winter, and as sudden
As flaws congealed in the spring of day. Shaksp.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a wall, t' expel the winter's flaw. Shakspeare.

As a huge fish, laid
Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north flaw fraid,
Shoots back; so, sent against the ground,
Was foil'd Eurialus. Chapman.

Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw,
Boreas, and Cæcias, and Argestes loud,
And Thrascias rend the woods, and seas upturn. Milton.

I heard the rack,
As earth and sky would mingle; but myself
Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals fear them,
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,
Are to the main inconsiderable. Milton.

4. A tumult; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage
Until the golden circuit on my head
Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw. Shaksp.

The fort 's revolted to the emperor,
The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn,
And deluges of armies from the town
Came pouring in; I heard the mighty flaw:

When first it broke, the crowding ensigns saw
Which choak'd the passage. Dryden.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would become
A woman's story at a winter's fire. Shakspeare.

To FLAW, flâw. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break; to crack; to damage with fissure.

But his flaw'd heart,
Alack, too weak the conflict to support,
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly. Shakspeare.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white not like a crystalline cup. Boyle.

The brazen cauldrons with the frosts are flaw'd,
The garment stiff with ice, at hearths is thaw'd.
Dryden.

2. To break; to violate. Out of use.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd
Our merchants' goods. Shakspeare.

FLA'WLESS, flâw'lês. adj. [from flaw.] Without cracks; without defects.

A star of the first magnitude, which the more high, more vast, and more flawless, shines only bright enough to make itself conspicuous. Boyle.

FLAWN, flâwn. n. s. [flena, Saxon; flan, French; vlaye, Dutch.] A sort of custard; a pie baked in a dish.

Fill oven full of flawns, Ginny pass not for sleep,

Fle'xor, flĕks'ôr.[166] n. s. [Latin.] The general name of the muscles which act in contracting the joints.

Flatterers who have the flexor muscles so strong that they are always bowing and cringing, might in some measure be corrected by being tied down upon a tree by the back. Arbuthnot.

Fle'xuous, flĕk'shŭ-ŭs.[452] adj. [flexuosus, Latin.]

1. Winding; full of turns and meanders; tortuous.

In regard of the soul, the numerous and crooked narrow cranies, and the restrained flexuous rivulets of corporeal things, are all contemptible. Digby.

2. Bending; not straight; variable; not steady.

The trembling of a candle discovers a wind, that otherwise we do not feel; and the flexuous burning of flames doth shew the air beginneth to be unquiet. Bacon's Natural History.

Fle'xure, flĕk'shûre. n. s. [flexura, Lat.]

1. The form or direction in which any thing is bent.

Contrary is the flexure of the joints of our arms and legs to that of quadrupeds: our knees bend forward, whereas the same joint of their hind legs bends backward. Ray.

2. The act of bending.

The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy; His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shakspeare.

3. The part bent; the joint.

His mighty strength lies in his able loins,
And where the flexure of his naval joins. Sandys.

4. Obsequious or servile cringe. Not used.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bends? Shaks.

To FLI'CKER, flik'ûr. v. a. [fligheren, Dutch; flicceprian, Saxon.] To flutter; to play the wings; to have a fluttering motion.

The wreath of radiant fire,
On flickering Phœbus' front. Shakspeare.
'Twas ebbing darkness, past the mid' of night,
And Phospher, on the confines of the light,
Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring;
The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,
And flick'ring on her nest made short essays to sing. Dryden.
At all her stretch her little wings she spread,
And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead;
Then flickering to his pallid lips, she strove
To print a kiss, the last essay of love. Dryden.

FLI'ER, fli'ûr.[98] n. s. [from fly.]

1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a runaway.

The gates are ope, now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
Now the fliers from and forsakers of their places, carry the parliamentary power along with them. King Charles.

2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest, as in a jack.

The flier tho 't had leaden feet,
Turn'd so quick, you scarce could see 't. Swift.

FLIGHT, flite.[393] n. s. [from To fly.]

1. The act of flying or running from danger.

And now, too late, he wishes for the fight,
That strength he wasted in ignoble flight. Denh.
He thinks by flight his mistress must be won,
And claims the prize because he best did run. Dryd.
As eager of the chase, the maid
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;
Pan saw and loy'd, and, burning with desire,

2. The act of using wings; volation.

For he so swift and nimble was of flight,
That from this lower tract he dar'd to fly
Up to the clouds, and thence with pinions light
To mount aloft unto the crystal sky. Spenser.
The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;
And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,
She to the Latian palace took her flight. Dryden.
Winds that tempests brew,
When through Arabian groves they take their flight,
Made wanton with rich odours, loose their spite. Dryden.

3. Removed from place to place by means of wings.

Ere the bat hath flown
His cloyster'd flight. Shaksp.
The fowls shall take their flight away together. 2 Esdras.
Fowls, by winter forc'd, forsake the floods,
And wing their hasty flight to happier lands. Dryd.

4. A flock of birds flying together.

Flights of angels wing thee to thy rest. Shaksp.
They take great pride in the feathers of birds, and this they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited into it by the infinite flights of birds that came up to the high grounds. Bacon.
I can at will, doubt not,
Command a table in this wilderness;
And call swift flights of angels ministrant,
Array'd in glory, on my cup t' attend. Milton.

5. The birds produced in the same season: as, the harvest flight of pigeons.

6. A volley; a shower; as much shot as is discharged at once.

At the first flight of arrows sent,
Full threescore Scots they slew. Chevy Chase.
Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, pricked me like so many needles; and besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs. Swift.

7. The space passed by flying.

8. Heat of imagination; sally of the soul.

Old Pindar's flights by him are reacht,
When on the gale his wings are stretcht. Denham.
He shewed all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has failed in some of his flights, it was because he attempted every thing. Pope.
Strange graces still, and stranger flights she had;
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.
Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,
When airs and flights, and screams and scolding fail. Pope.

9. Excursion on the wing.

If there were any certain height where the flights of ambition end, one might imagine that the interests of France were but to conserve its present greatness. Temple.
It is not only the utmost pitch of impiety, but the highest flight of folly to deride these things. Tillotson.

10. The power of flying.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight,
The self-same way. Shaksp.

FLI'GHTY, fli'tê. adj. [from flight.]

1. Fleeting; swift.

Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it. Shaksp.

2. Wild; full of imagination.

FLI'MSY, flim'zê. adj. [Of this word I know not any original, and suspect it to have crept into our language from the cant of manufacturers.]

1. Weak; feeble; without strength of texture.

2. Mean; spiritless; without force.

Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines. Pope.

To FLINCH, flinsh. v. n. [corrupted from fling. Skinner.]

1. To shrink from any suffering or undertaking; to withdraw from any pain or danger.

Every martyr could keep one eye steadily fixed upon immortality, and look death and danger out of countenance with the other; nor did they flinch from duty, for fear of martyrdom. South.
A child, by a constant course of kindness, may be accustomed to bear very rough usuage without flinching or complaining. Locke.
Oh ingratitude! that John Bull, whom I have honour'd with my friendship, should flinch at last, and pretend that he can disburse no more money. Arbuthnot.

2. In Shakspeare it signifies to fail.

If I break time, or flinch in property
O what I spoke, unpitied let me die. Shaksp.

FLI'NCHER, flinsh'ûr. n. s. [from the verb.] He who shrinks or fails in any matter.

To FLING, fling. v. a. preter. flung; part. flung or flong. [from fligo, Lat. Skinner: according to others from flying; so to fling is to set flying.]

1. To cast from the hand; to throw.

The matrons flung their gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs,
Upon him. Shaksp.
'Tis fate that flings the dice; and as she flings,
Of kings makes peasants, and of peasants kings. Dryden.

2. To dart; to cast with violence.

How much unlike that Hector who return'd
Clad in Achilles' spoils; when he, among
A thousand ships, like Jove, his lightning flung. Denham

3. To scatter.

Ev'ry beam new transient colours flings,
Colours that change whene'er they wave their wings. Pope.

4. To drive by violence.

A heap of rocks, falling, would expel the waters out of their places with such a violence as to fling them among the highest clouds. Burnet.

5. To move forcibly.

The knight seeing his habitation reduced to so small compass, ordered all the apartments to be flung open. Addison.

6. To cast: in an ill sense.

I know thy gen'rous temper:
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it,
It straight takes fire. Addison.

7. To force into another condition, probably into a worse.

Squalid fortune, into baseness flung,
Doth scorn the pride of wonted ornaments. Spenser.

8. To FLING away. To eject; to dismiss.

Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels. Shaksp.

9. To FLING down. To demolish; to ruin.

These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before standing. Woodward.

10. To FLING off. To baffle in the chase; to defeat of a prey.

These men are too well acquainted with the chase to be flung off by any false steps or doubles. Addison.

To FLING, fling. v. n.

1. To flounce; to wince; to fly into violent and irregular motions.

The angry beast
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if h' had been beside his sense. Hudibras.
Their consciences are galled by it, and this makes them wince and fling as if they had some mettle. Tillotson.

2. To FLING out. To grow unruly or outrageous: from the act of any angry horse that throws out his legs.

Duncan's horses,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience. Shaksp.

FLING, fling. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A throw; a cast.

2. A gibe; a sneer; a contemptuous remark.

No little scribbler is of wit so bare,
But has his fling at the poor wedded pair. Addison.
I, who love to have a fling,
Both at senate house and king,
Thought no method more commodious
Than to show their vices odious. Swift.

FLI'NGER, fling'ûr.[409] n. s. [from the verb.]

1. He who throws.

2. He who jeers.

FLINT, flint. n. s. [flint, Sax.]

1. A semipellucid stone, composed of crystal debased, of a blackish gray, of one similar and equal substance, free from veins, and naturally invested with a whitish crust. It is sometimes smooth and equal, more frequently rough: its size is various. It is well known to strike fire with steel. It is useful in glassmaking. Hill on Fossils.
Searching the window for a flint, I found
This paper. Shaksp.

Love melts the rigour which the rocks have bred,
A flint will break upon a featherbed. Cleaveland.
There is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in fire kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled by a beam from the sun. South.
Take this, and lay your flint edg'd weapon by. Dryden.
I'll fetch quick fuel from the neighb'ring wood,
And strike the sparkling flint, and dress the food. Prior.

2. Any thing eminently or proverbially hard.

Your tears, a heart of flint
Might tender make. Spenser.
Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault. Shaksp.

FLI'NTY, flint'ê. adj. [from flint.]

1. Made of flint; strong.

Tyrant custom
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down. Shaksp.
A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back. Dryden.

2. Full of stones.

The gathering up of flints in flinty ground, and laying them in heaps is no good husbandry. Bacon.

3. Hard of heart; cruel; savage; inexorable.

Gratitude,
Through flinty Tartar's bosom, would peep forth,
And answer thanks. Shaksp.

FLIPP, flip. n. s. [A cant word.] A liquor much used in ships, made by mixing beer with spirits and sugar.

The Tarpawlin and swabber is lolling at Madagascar, with some drunken sunburnt whore, over a can of flip. Dennis.

FLI'PPANT, flip'pânt. adj. [A word of no great authority, probably derived from flip-flap.]

1. Nimble; moveable. It is used only of the act of speech.

An excellent anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices which render it so wonderfully voluble or flippant. Addison.

2. Pert; petulent; waggish.

Away with flippant epilogues. Thomson.

FLI'PPANTLY, flip'pânt-lê. adv. [from the adjective.] In a flowing prating way.

Have licence to play,
At the hedge a flirt,
For a sheet or a shirt. Ben Jonson.

3. A pert young hussy.

Scurvy knave, I am none of his flirt gills; I am none of his skains mates. Shaksp.
Several young flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world. Addison.

FLIRTA'TION, flûr-tâ'shûn. n. s. [from flirt.] A quick sprightly motion. A cant word among women.

A muslin flounce, made very full, would give a very agreeable flirtation air. Pope.

To FLIT, flît. v. n. [from To fleet; or from flitter, Danish, to remove.]

1. To fly away.

Likest it seemeth, in my simple wit,
Unto the fair sunshine in summer's day,
That when a dreadful storm away is flit,
Through the broad world doth spread his goodly ray. Spenser.

2. To remove; to migrate. In Scotland it is still used for removing from one place to another at quarter-day, or the usual term.

His grudging ghost did strive
With the frail flesh, at last it flitted is,
Whither the souls do die of men that live amiss. Fairy Queen.
So hardly he the flitted life does win,
Unto her native prison to return. Fairy Queen.
It became a received opinion, that the souls of men, departing this life, did flit out of one body into some other. Hooker.

3. To flutter; to rove on the wing.

He made a glancing shot, and miss'd the dove;
Yet miss'd so narrow that he cut the cord
Which fasten'd, by the foot, the flitting bird. Dryd.
Fear the just gods, and think of Scylla's fate!
Chang'd to a bird, and sent to flit in air. Pope.

4. To be flux or unstable.

Himself uphigh he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly divide
The yielding air, which nigh too feeble found
Her flitting parts, and element unsound. F. Queen.
He stopt at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd. Dryden.

FLIT, flît. adj. [from fleet.] Swift; nimble; quick. Not in use.

And in his hand two darts exceeding flit,
And deadly sharp, he held; whose heads were dight,
In poison and in blood, of malice and despight. Fairy Queen.

FLITCH, flîtsh. n. s. [flicce, Sax. flycke, Dan. fleshe, floche, Fr. Skinner.] The side of a hog salted and cured.

But heretofore 'twas thought a sumptuous feast,
On birthdays, festivals, or days of state,
A salt dry flitch of bacon to prepare;
If they had fresh meat, 'twas delicious fare. Dryd.
While he from out the chimney took,
A flitch of bacon off the hook,
Cut out large slices to be fry'd. Swift.
He sometimes accompanies the present with a flitch of bacon. Addison.

Fast on the top of some high mountain fix'd. Milt.
That men being drowned and sunk, do float the ninth day, when their gall breaketh, are popular affirmations. Brown.
Three blust'ring nights, borne by the southern blast,
I floated; and discover'd land at last. Dryden.
His rosy wreath was dropt not long before,
Born by the tide of wine, and floating on the floor. Dryden.
On frothy billows thousands float the stream,
In cumb'rous mail. Philips.
Carp are very apt to float away with fresh water. Mortimer.

2. To move without labour in a fluid.

What divine monsters, O ye gods, were these
That float in air, and fly upon the seas! Dryden.
Swift they descend, with wing to wing conjoin'd,
Stretch their broad plumes, and float upon the wind. Pope.

3. To pass with a light irregular course: perhaps mistaken for fleet or flet.

Floating visions make not deep impressions enough to leave in the mind clear, distinct, lasting ideas. Locke.

To FLOAT, flôte. v. a. To cover with water.

Proud Pactolus floats the fruitful lands,
And leaves a rich manure of golden sands. Dryd.
Venice looks, at a distance, like a great town half floated by a deluge. Addison.
Now smoaks with show'rs the misty mountain-ground,
And floated fields lie undistinguish'd round. Pope.
The vast parterres a thousand hands shall make:
Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake. Pope.

FLOAT, flôte. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of flowing; the flux; the contrary to ebb. A sense now out of use.

Our trust in the Almighty is, that with us contentions are now at their highest float. Hooker.
There is some disposition of bodies to rotation; particularly from east to west; of which kind we conceive the main float and refloat of the sea is, which is by consent of the universe as part of the diurnal motion. Bacon.

2. Any body so contrived or formed as to swim upon the water.

They took it for a ship, and as it came nearer, for a boat; but it proved a float of weeds and rushes. L'Estrange.
A passage for the weary people make:
With osier floats the standing water strow,
Of massy stones make bridges, if it flow. Dryden.

4. To move any thing in quick circles or vibrations by way of show or triumph.
And all the powers of hell in full applause
Flourish'd their snakes, and toss'd their flaming brands. Crashaw.
Against the post their wicker shields they crush,
Flourish the sword, and at the plastron push. Dryd.
5. To adorn with embellishments of language; to grace with eloquence ostentatiously diffusive.
The labours of Hercules, though flourished with much fabulous matter, yet notably set forth the consent of all nations and ages in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating giants, monsters, and tyrants. Bacon.
As they are likely to over-flourish their own case, so their flattery is hardest to be discovered. Collier.
6. To adorn; to embellish; to grace.
To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin,
Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit. Shakspeare.

FLO'URISH, flûr'rîsh. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Bravery; beauty; ambitious splendour.
I call'd thee then vain flourish of my fortune;
I call'd thee then, poor shadow, painted queen,
The presentation of but what I was. Shakspeare.
The flourish of his sober youth,
Was the pride of naked truth. Crashaw.
2. An ostentatious embellishment, ambitious copiousness; far-fetched elegance.
This is a flourish: there follow excellent parables. Bacon.
We can excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow the flourish of poetry thereon, or those commendatory conceits which popularly set forth the eminence of this creature. Brown.
The apprehension is so deeply rivetted into my mind, that such rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen or brush it out. More.
Villanies have not the same countenance, when there are great interests, plausible colours, and flourishes of wit and rhetorick interposed between the sight and the object. L'Estrange.
The so much repeated ornament and flourish of their former speeches was commonly the truest word they spoke, though least believed by them. South.
Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he slurs his crimes;
He lards with flourishes his long harangue;
'Tis fine, say'st thou; what? to be prais'd and hang? Dryden.
3. Figures formed by lines curiously or wantonly drawn.
A child with delight looks upon emblems finely drawn and painted, and takes some pleasure in beholding the neat characters and flourishes of a bible curiously printed. Boyle.
They were intended only for ludicrous ornaments of nature, like the flourishes about a great letter that signify nothing, but are made only to delight the eye. More against Atheism.

FLO'URISHER, flûr'rîsh-ûr. n. s. [from flourish.] One that is in prime or in prosperity.
They count him of the green-hair'd eld, they may, or in his flower;
For not our greatest flourisher can equal him in pow'r. Chapman.

FLOW, flō. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The rise of water; not the ebb.

Some from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to solve the flows and motions of these seas, illustrating the same by water in a bowl, that rises or falls according to the motion of the vessel. Brown.

The ebb of tides, and their mysterious flow,
We as arts elements shall understand. Dryden.

2. A sudden plenty or abundance.

The noble power of suffering bravely is as far above that of enterprising greatly, as an unblemished conscience and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood. Pope.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue.

Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better. South.

FLO'WER, flŏŭ'ŭr.[98 325] n. s. [fleur, Fr. flos, floris, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petala, a stamen, apex, and stylus; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller, and which usually have but one single stile: and compounded, which consist of many flosculi, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one entire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petala, or leaves; as in borage, buglos: or polypetalous, which have distinct petala, and those falling off singly, and not altogether, as the seeming petala of monopetalous flowers always do: but those are further divided into uniform and difform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike, but the difform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage and dead-nettle. A monopetalous difform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semi-fistular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the arilostochia: 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcissus; but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and represents a kind of helmet, or monkshood; and from thence these are frequently called galleate, cucullate, and galericulate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes the lamium is entire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Corniculate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as the linaria, delphinum, &c. and the carniculum, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are, first, discous or discoidal; that is, whose flosculi are set so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which, because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petala, standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum: 2d, planifolious, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched, and jagged, as the hieracia: 3d, fistular, which is compounded of long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jags at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petala, are called stamineous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the juli, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cats-tail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel. Miller.

Good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or ere they sicken. Shakspeare.

With flow'r inwoven, tresses torn,
The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn. Milton.

Beauteous flowers why do we spread
Upon the monuments of the dead. Cowley.

Though the same sun with all-diffusive rays
Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We praise the stronger effort of his power,
And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

If the blossom of the plant be of most importance, we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips, and carnations. Watts.

2. An ornament; an embellishment.

The nomination of persons to those places being so prime and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself. Clarendon.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the excellent flowers of rhetorick in it, shew him to have been a sweet and powerful orator. Hakewill.

Truth needs no flow'rs of speech. Pope.

3. The prime; the flourishing part.

Alas! young man, your days can ne'er be long:
In flow'r of age you perish for a song. Pope.

4. The edible part of corn; the meal.

The bread I would have in flower, so as it might be baked still to serve their necessary want. Spenser.

I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakspeare.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbuthnot.

But by thy care twelve urns of wine be fill'd,
Next these in worth, and firm those urns be seal'd,
Be twice ten measures of the choicest flour
Prepared, ere yet descends the evening hour. Pope.

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quintessence.

The choice and flower of all things profitable the Psalms do more briefly contain, and more movingly express by reason of their poetical form. Hooker.

Thou hast slain
The flower of Europe for his chivalry. Shaksp.

The French monarchy is exhausted of its bravest subjects: the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars. Addison.

6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable.

He is not the flower of courtesy, but, I warrant him as gentle as a lamb. Shakspeare.

FLO'WER de Luce, flŏŭ'ŭr-dē-lūse'. n. s. A bulbous iris.

Miller specifies thirty-four species of this plant; and among them the Persian flower de luce is greatly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its variegated flowers, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March

Crop'd are the flower de luces in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shaksp.

The iris is the flower de luce. Peacham.

To FLO'WER, flŏŭ'ŭr. v. n. [fleurir, Fr.; or from the noun.]

1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers.

So forth they marched in this goodly sort,
To take the solace of the open air,
And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport. Fairy Queen.

Sacred hill, whose head full high,
Is, as it were, for endless memory
Of that dear Lord, who oft thereon was found,
For ever with a flow'ring garland crown'd. Fairy Queen.

Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flower'd,
Op'ning their various colours. Milton.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load. Dryd.

To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed
And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed. Pope.

2. To be in the prime; to flourish.

Whilome in youth, when flower'd my youthful spring,
Like swallow swift, I wandered here and there;
For heat of heedless lust me did so sting,
That I of doubted danger had no fear. Spenser.

This cause detain'd me all my flow'ring youth,
Within a loathsome dungeon there to pine. Shaksp.

3. To froth; to ferment; to mantle, as new bottled beer.

Those above water were the best, and that beer did flower a little: whereas that under water did not, though it were fresh. Bacon.

An extreme clarification doth spread the spirits so smooth that they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flowering. Bacon.

4. To come as cream from the surface.

If you can accept of these few observations, which have flowered off, and are, as it were, the burnishing of many studious and contemplative years, I here give you them to dispose of. Milton.

To FLOW'ER, flŏŭ'ŭr. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with fictitious or imitated flowers.

FLO'WERAGE, flŏŭ'ŭr-āje. n. s. [from flower.] Store of flowers. Dict.

Sometimes her head she fondly would aguise
With gaudy garlands, of fresh flow'rets dight,
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight. F. Queen.

That same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,
Stood now within the pretty flow'ret's eyes,
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail. Shakspeare.

So to the Sylvan lodge
They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,
With flow'rets deck'd, and fragrant smells. Milton.

Then laughs the childish year with flow'rets crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around;
But no substantial nourishment receives,
Infirm the stalks, unsolid are the leaves. Dryden.

FLO'WERGARDEN, flŏŭ'ŭr-gär-d'n. n. s. [flower and garden.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated.

Observing that this manure produced flowers in the field, I made my gardener try those shells in my flowergarden, and I never saw better carnations or flowers. Mortimer.

FLO'WERINESS, flŏŭ'ŭr-ē-nĕs. n. s. [from flowery.]

1. The state of abounding in flowers.

2. Floridness of speech.

FLO'WKWORT, flûke'wûrt. n. s. The name of a plant.

FLOWN, flône. The participle of fly, or flee, they being confounded; properly of fly.

1. Gone away.

For those,
Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,
Flown to the upper world. Milton.

Where, my deluded sense! was reason flown?
Where the high majesty of David's throne? Prior.

2. Puffed; inflated; elate.

And when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine. Milton.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from your deeds I rightly may divine,
Unseemly flown with insolence or wine. Pope.

FLU'CTUANT, flûk'tshû-ânt.[461] adj. [fluctuans, Lat.] Waving; uncertain.

To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand wishing and hankering at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluctuant wandering humour and opinion? L'Estrange.

To FLU'CTUATE, flûk'tshû-âte. v. n. [fluctuo, Lat.]

1. To roll to and again, as water in agitation.

The fluctuating fields of liquid air,
With all the curious meteors hovering there,
And the wide regions of the land, proclaim
That Pow'r Divine, that raised the mighty frame. Blackmore.

2. To float backward and forward, as with the motion of water.

3. To move with uncertain and hasty motion.

The tempter
New parts puts on; and, as to passion mov'd,
Fluctuates disturb'd. Milton.

4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes.

As the greatest part of my estate has hitherto been of an unsteady and volatile nature, either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements. Addison.

5. To be irresolute; to be undetermined.

FLUCTUA'TION, flûk-tshû-â'shûn. n. s. [fluctuatio, Latin; fluctuation, French; from fluctuate.]

1. The alternate motion of the water.

Fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interjacency irregulates. Brown.

They were caused by the impulses and fluctuation of water in the bowels of the earth. Woodward.

2. Uncertainty; indetermination.

It will not hinder it from making a proselyte of a person that loves fluctuation of judgment little enough to be willing to be eased of it by any thing but errour. Boyle.

FLUE, flû.[335] n. s. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from flew, of fly.]

1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.

2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind.

FLU'ELLIN, flû-êl'lin. n. s. The herb SPEEDWELL.

FLU'ENCY, flû'ên-sê. n. s. [from fluent.]

1. The quality of flowing; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity.

Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasantries for admirers of points of wit. Garth.

2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility.

Our publick liturgy must be cashiered, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency. King Charles.

We reason with such fluency and fire,
The beaux we baffle and the learned tire. Tickel.

The common fluency of speech in many men, and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is a master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both. Swift.

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease,
Behold him tost on seas. Sandy.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys.

FLU'ENT, flû'ênt. adj. [fluens, Lat.]

1. Liquid.

It is not malleable; but yet is not fluent, but stupified. Bacon.

2. Flowing; in motion; influx.

Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must do so the next. Ray.

3. Ready; copious; voluble.

Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech. Bacon.

I shall lay before you all that 's within me,
And with most fluent utterance. Denham.

FLU'ID, flû'îd. adj. [fluidus, Lat.; fluide, Fr.] Having parts easily separable; not solid.

Or serve thee as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,
Lest it again dissolve, and show'r the earth. Milton.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton.

FLU'ID, flû'îd. n. s.

1. Any thing not solid.

2. [In physick.] Any animal juice: as the blood.

Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids. Arbuthnot.

FLUI'DITY, flû-îd'ê-tê. n. s. [fluidité, Fr. from fluid.] The quality in bodies opposite to stability; want of coherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much by diminishing the tenacity of bodies; it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids as of oil, balsam, and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance. Newton.

A disease opposite to this spissitude is too great fluidity. Arbuthnot.

FLU'IDNESS, flû'îd-nês. n. s. [from fluid.] That quality in bodies opposite to stability.

What if we should say that fluidness and stability depend so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture, the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too? Boyle.

FLU'MMERY, flûm'ûr-ê. n. s. A kind of food made by a coagulation of wheat flower or oatmeal.

Milk and flummery are very fit for children. Locke.

To FLUSH, flûsh. v. n. [fluysen, Dutch, to flow; flus, or flux, Fr.]

1. To flow with violence.

The pulse of the heart he attributes to an ebullition and sudden expansion of the blood in the ventricles, after the manner of the milk, which, being heated to such a degree, doth suddenly and all at once, flush up and run over the vessel. Ray.

It flushes violently out of the cock for about a quart, and then stops. Mortimer.

2. To come in haste.

If the place but affords
Any store of lucky birds,
As I make 'em to flush
Each owl out of his bush. Ben Jonson.

3. To glow in the skin; to produce a colour in the face by a sudden afflux of blood. It is properly used of a sudden or transient heat of countenance; not of a settled complexion.

Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her gauled eyes,
She married. Shakspeare.

Thus Eve with count'nance blithe her story told,
But in her cheek distemper flushing glow'd. Milton.

What can be more significant than the sudden flushing and confusion of a blush? Collier.

What means that lovely fruit? What means, alas!
That blood which flushes guilty in your face? Dryd.

At once, array'd
In all the colours of the flushing year,
The garden glows. Thomson.

4. To shine suddenly. Obsolete.

A flake of fire that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenser.

FLUSH, flûsh. adj.

1. Fresh; full of vigour.

He took my father grossly, full of bread,

With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows, save Heav'n?
Shakspeare.

I love to wear clothes that are flush,
Not prefacing old rags with plush. Cleaveland.

2. Affluent; abounding. A cant word.

Lord Strut was not very flush in ready, either to go to law, or clear old debts; neither could he find good bail. Arbuthnot.

FLUSH. flŭsh. n. s.

1. Afflux; sudden impulse; violent flow. This is commonly corrupted to flash: as, a flash of water.

Never had any man such a loss, cries a widower, in the flush of his extravagancies for a dead wife. L'Estrange.

The pulse of the arteries is not only caused by the pulsation of the heart, driving the blood through them in manner of a wave or flush, but by the coats of the arteries themselves. Ray.

Success may give him a present flush of joy; but when the short transport is over, the apprehension of losing succeeds to the care of acquiring. Rogers.

2. Cards all of a sort.

To FLU'STER, flŭs'tŭr. v. a. [from To flush.] To make hot and rosy with drinking; to make half drunk.

Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
Have I to-night fluster'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Shakspeare.

FLUTE, flūte. n. s. [fluste, flute, Fr.; fluyte, Dutch.]

1. A musical pipe; a pipe with stops for the fingers.

Th' oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke. Shaksp.

The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute.
Dryden.

2. A channel or furrow in a pillar, like the concave of a flute split.

To FLUTE, flūte. v. a. To cut columns into hollows.

To FLU'TTER, flŭt'tŭr.[98] v. n. [flotepan, Sax. flotter, Fr.]

1. To take short flights with great agitation of the wings.

As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, and spreadeth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him. Deuteronomy.

Think you 've an angel by the wings!
One that gladly will be nigh,
To wait upon each morning-sigh;
To flutter in the balmy air
Of your well perfumed prayer. Crashaw.

They fed, and, flutt'ring, by degrees withdrew.
Dryden.

2. To move about with great show and bustle without consequence.

Excess muddles the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew.

No rag, no scrap of all the beau or wit,
That once so flutter'd, and that once so writ. Pope.

3. To be moved with quick vibrations or undulations.

Ye spirits, to your charge repair;
The flutt'ring fan be Zephyretta's care. Pope.

They the tall mast above the vessel rear,
Or teach the flutt'ring sail to float in air. Pope.

4. To be in agitation; to move irregularly; to be in a state of uncertainty.

The relation being brought him what a glorious victory was got, and how long she fluttered upon the wings of doubtful success, he was not surprised. Howel.

It is impossible that men should certainly discover the agreement or disagreement of ideas, whilst their thoughts flutter about, or stick only in sounds of doubtful signification. Locke.

Esteem we these, my friends! event and chance,
Produc'd by atoms from their flutt'ring dance! Prior.

His thoughts are very fluttering and wandering, and cannot be fixed attentively to a few ideas successively. Watts.

To FLU'TTER, flŭt'tŭr. v. a.

FLUXI'LITY, flŭks ĭl'ē-tē. n. s. [fluxus, Latin.] Easiness of separation of parts; possibility of liquefaction.

Experiments seem to teach, that the supposed aversation of nature to a vacuum is but accidental, or in consequence partly of the weight and fluidity, or at least fluxility of the bodies here below. Boyle.

FLU'XION, flŭk'shŭn. n. s. [fluxio, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing.

2. The matter that flows.

The fluxion increased, and abscesses were raised. Wiseman.

3. [In mathematicks.] The arithmetick or analysis of infinitely small variable quantities; or it is the method of finding an infinite small, or infinitely small quantity, which being taken an infinite number of times, becomes equal to a quantity given. Harris.

A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, are not worth the labour of those, who design the learned professions as the business of life. Watts.

To FLY, flī. v. n. pret. flew or fled; part. fled or flown. [flēogan, Sax. To fly is properly to use wings, and gives flew and flown. To flee is to escape, or to go away, flean, Saxon, and makes fled. They are now confounded.]

1. To move through the air with wings.

Ere the bat hath flown
His cloister'd flight. Shaksp.

Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven. Genesis.

These men's hastiness the warier sort of you do not commend: ye wish they had held themselves longer in, and not flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown. Hooker.

2. To pass through the air.

Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward. Job.

3. To pass away, with the idea of swiftness or escape.

Ev'n a romance, a tune, a rhime,
Help thee to pass the tedious time,
Which else would on thy hand remain;
Though flown, it ne'er looks back again. Prior.

4. To pass swiftly.

The scouts with flying speed
Return, and through the city spread the news.
Dryden.

Earth rolls back beneath the flying steed. Pope.

5. To move with rapidity.

As striplings whip the top for sport,
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about. Dryd.

6. To part with violence.

Glad to catch this good occasion,
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder. Shaksp.

He bassas' heads, to save his own, made fly;
And now, the sultan to preserve, must die. Waller.

7. To break; to shiver; to burst asunder with a sudden explosion.

Behold a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

8. [flean, Saxon; flichen, German.] To run away; to attempt escape. In this sense the verb is properly to flee, whence fled is formed; but the following examples show that they are confounded: they are confounded oftener in the present than in the preter tense.

Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,
As lion fierce, upon the flying prey. Spenser.

Ye shall flee, as ye fled from before the earthquake. Zechariah.

Abiathar escaped, and fled after David. 1 Sam.

What wonder if the kindly beams he shed,
Reviv'd the drooping arts again;
If science rais'd her head,
And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled. Dryd.

He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,
And live in shades with her and love alone. Prior.

I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains;
From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,
Forsake mankind, and all the world but love. Pope.

9. To FLY at. To spring with violence upon; to fall on suddenly.

A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, thereat enrag'd,
Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead.
Shakspeare.

Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth, and bark, and fly at him. Bacon.

No honour, no fortune can keep a man from being miserable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat. South.

This is an age that flies at all learning, and enquires especially into faults. South.

10. To FLY in the face. To insult.

This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face; and he must expect only danger to himself. Swift.

11. To FLY in the face. To act in defiance.

Fly in nature's face:
—But how, if nature fly in my face first?
—Then nature 's the aggressor. Dryden.

12. To FLY off. To revolt.

Deny to speak to me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all the night! mean fetches;
The images of revolt and flying off. Shaksp.

The traitor Syphax
Flew off at once with his Numidian horse. Addison.

13. To FLY out. To burst into passion.

How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,
From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out
In contumelies, makes a noise, and stinks.
Ben Jonson.

Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect. Collier.

14. To FLY out. To break out into licence.

You use me like a courser spurr'd and rein'd:
If I fly out, my fierceness you command. Dryden.

Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pageantries of worship; but when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close intrenched behind the council of Trent. Dryden.

15. To FLY out. To start violently from any direction.

All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained. Bentley.

16. To let FLY. To discharge.

The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky. Granville.

17. To be light and unencumbered: as, a flying camp.

To FLY, flī. v. a.

1. To shun; to avoid; to decline.

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;
Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues.
Shakspeare.

O Jove, I think
Foundations fly the wretched; such I mean,
Where they should be reliev'd. Shaksp

If you fly physick in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need it. Bacon.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle. Milton.

2. To refuse association with.

Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares opprest,
And his toss'd limbs are weary'd into rest,
Then dreams invade. Dryden.

Nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryd.

3. To quit by flight.

Dedalus to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The first who sail'd in air. Dryden.

4. To attack by a bird of prey.

If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravening fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth. Bacon.

5. It is probable that flew was originally the preterit of fly, when it signified volation, and fled when it signified escape; flown should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded. I know not any book except the scriptures in which fly and flee are carefully kept separate.

FLY, flī. n. s. [ꝼleoȝe, Saxon.]

1. A small winged insect of many species.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods:
They kill us for their sport. Shaksp.

My country neighbours begin to think of being in general, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tares in their corn. Locke.

To prevent the fly, some propose to sow ashes with the seed. Mortimer.

To heedless flies the window proves
A constant death. Thomson.

2. That part of a machine which, being put into a quick motion, regulates and equalises the motion of the rest.

If we suppose a man tied in the place of the weight, it were easy, by a single hair fastened unto the fly or balance of the jack, to draw him up from the ground. Wilkins.

3. That part of a vane which points how the wind blows.

To FLY'BLOW, flī'blō. v. a. [fly and blow.] To taint with flies; to fill with maggots.

I am unwilling to believe that he designs to play tricks, and to flyblow my words, to make others distaste them Stillingfleet.

Like a flyblown cake of tallow;
Or, on parchment, ink turn'd yellow. Swift.

So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buz, and flyblow in the setting sun. Pope.

FLY'BOAT, flī'bōte. n. s. [fly and boat.] A kind of vessel nimble and light for sailing.

FLYCA'TCHER, flī'kâtsh-ûr. n. s. [fly and catch.] One that hunts flies.

There was more need of Brutus in Domitian's days, to mend, than of Horace, to laugh at a flycatcher. Dryden.

The swallow was a flycatcher as well as the spider. L'Estrange.

FLY'ER, flī'ûr. [98] n. s. [from fly.]

1. One that flies or runs away. This is written more frequently flier.

They hit one another with darts, as the others do with their hands, which they never throw counter, but at the back of the flier. Sandys.

He grieves so many Britons should be lost;
Taking more pains, when he beheld them yield,
To save the fliers than to win the field. Waller.

2. One that uses wings.

3. The fly of a jack.

4. [In architecture.] Stairs made of an oblong square figure, whose fore and back sides are parallel to each other, and so are their ends: the second of these flyers stands parallel behind the first, the third behind the second, and so are said to fly off from one another. Moxon.

To FLY'FISH, flī'fish. v. n. [fly and fish.] To angle with a hook baited with a fly, either natural or artificial.

I shall give you some directions for flyfishing. Walton.

FOAL, fōle. [395] n. s. [ꝼola, Saxon.] The offspring of a mare, or other beast of burden.

Also flew his steed,
And with his winged heels did tread the wind,
As he had been a foal of Pegasus's kind. F. Queen.

Twenty she-asses and ten foals. Genesis.

To FOAL, fōle. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth. Used of mares.

Give my horse to Timon: it foals me straight

Thus foil'd their mightiest. Milton.

Leader of those armies bright,
Which but th' omnipotent none could have foil'd. Milton.

Yet these subject not: I to thee disclose
What inward thence I feel, not therefore foil'd:
Who meet with various objects, from the sense
Variously representing: yet still free,
Approve the best, and follow what I approve. Milton.

Strange, that your fingers should the pencil foil,
Without the help of colours or of oil! Waller.

He had been foiled in the cure, and had left it to nature. Wiseman.

In their conflicts with sin they have been so often foiled, that they now despair of ever getting the day. Calamy.

Virtue, disdain, despair, I oft have try'd;
And, foil'd, have with new arms my foe defy'd. Dryden.

But I, the consort of the thunderer,
Have wag'd a long and unsuccessful war;
With various arts and arms in vain have toil'd,
And by a mortal man at length am foil'd. Dryden.

2. [fouiller, French.] To blunt; to dull.

When light-wing'd toys
Of feather'd Cupid foil, with wanton dulness,
My speculative and offic'd instruments. Shaksp.

3. To defeat; to puzzle.

Whilst I am following one character, I am cross'd in my way by another, and put up such a variety of odd creatures in both sexes, that they foil the scent of one another, and puzzle the chase. Addison.

Foil, fŏil.[299] n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A defeat; a miscarriage; an advantage gained without a complete conquest.

We of thy cunning had no diffidence;
One sudden foil shall never breed distrust. Shaksp.

Whosoever overthroweth his mate in such sort, as that either his back, or the one shoulder, and contrary heel do touch the ground, shall be accounted to give the fall: if he be endangered, and make a narrow escape, it is call'd a foil. Carew.

So after many a foil the tempter proud,
Renewing fresh assaults, amidst his pride,
Fell whence he stood to see his victor fall. Milton.

When age shall level me to impotence,
And sweating pleasure leave me on the foil. Southern.

Death never won a stake with greater toil,
Nor e'er was fate so near a foil. Dryden.

2. [feuille, French.] Leaf gilding.

A stately palace, built of squared brick,
Which cunningly was without mortar laid,
Whose walls were high, but nothing strong nor thick.

And golden foil all over them display'd. F. Queen.
Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
Nor in the glistering foil
Set off to th' world, nor in broad rumour lies. Milt.

3. Something of another colour near which jewels are set to raise their lustre.
As she a black silk cap on him begun
To set for foil of his milk-white to serve. Sidney.
Like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shaksp.
The sullen passage of thy weary steps
Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set
The precious jewel of thy home. Shaksp.
'Tis the property of all true diamonds to unite the foil closely to itself, and thereby better augment its lustre: the foil is a mixture of mastich and burnt ivory. Grew.
Hector has a foil to set him off: we oppose the incontinence of Paris to the temperance of Hector. Broome.

4. [from fouiller, French.] A blunt sword used in fencing.
He that plays the king shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me; the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target. Shaksp.

The ancient Egyptian mummies were shrowded in a number of folds of linen, besmeared with gums. Bacon.
Not with indented wave, the serpent then
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd
Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton.
Let the draperies be nobly spread upon the body, and let the folds be large: the parts should be often traversed by the flowing of the folds. Dryden.
With fear and wonder seiz'd, the crowd beholds
The gloves of death, with seven distinguish'd folds
Of tough bull hides. Dryden.
The inward coat of a lion's stomach has stronger folds than a human, but in other things not much different. Arbuthnot.

6. From the foregoing signification is derived the use of fold in composition. Fold signifies the same quantity added: as two fold, twice the quantity; twenty fold, twenty times repeated.
But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit; some an hundred fold, some sixty fold, some thirty fold. Matthew.
At last appear
Hell bounds high reaching to the horrid roof,
And thrice three fold the gates: three folds were brass,
Three iron, three of adamantine rock. Milton.
Their martyr'd blood and ashes sow
O'er all th' Italian fields, where still doth sway
The triple tyrant; that from these may grow
A hundred fold. Milton.

To FOLD, fôld. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut sheep in the fold.
The star that bids the shepherd fold,
Now the top of heav'n doth hold. Milton.

2. Follicle is a term in botany, signifying seed-vessels, capsula seminalis, or case, which some fruits and seeds have over them; as that of the alkengi, pedicularis, &c. Quincy.

To FO'LLOW, fôl'lô.[327] v. a. [ƿolgian, Saxon; volgen, Dutch.]

1. To go after; not before, or side by side.

I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf. Shakspeare.

Him and all his train
Follow'd in bright procession, to behold
Creation, and the wonders of his might. Milton.

What could I do,
But follow strait, invisibly thus led? Milton.

2. To pursue as an enemy; to chase.

Where ranks fell thickest was indeed the place
To seek Sebastian, through a track of death
I follow'd him by groans of dying foes. Dryden.

3. To accompany; not to forsake.

Yet doubt not but in valley and in plain
God is as here, and will be found alike
Present, and of his presence many a sign
Still following thee, still compassing thee round
With goodness and paternal love, his face
Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton.

Up he rode,
Follow'd with acclamation and the sound
Symphonious of ten thousand harps that tun'd
Angelic harmonies. Milton.

4. To attend as a dependant.

And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and followed Saul to the battle. 1 Samuel.

To the oracle of Apollo. Ben Jonson.

2. To attend servilely.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion,
That in the nature of their lords rebels:
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shaks.

3. To be posteriour in time.

4. To be consequential, as effect to cause.

If the neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness mislead him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow. Locke.

5. To be consequential, as inference to premises.

Though there are or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country. Temple.

Dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's paternal power. Locke.

6. To continue endeavours; to persevere.

Then shall we know if we follow on to know the Lord. Hosea.

FO'LLOWER, fôl'lô-ûr. n. s. [from follow.]

1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.

Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower; but now you are a leader; whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels? Shaksp.

No stop, no stay, but clouds of sand arise,
Spurn'd and cast backward on the follower's eyes. Dryden.

2. One who observes a guide or leader.

The understanding that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself; and so brings all the inconveniences that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide. South.

3. An attendant or dependant.

No follower, but a friend. Pope.

4. An associate; a companion.

How accompanied, can'st thou tell that?
—With Poins, and other his continual followers. Shakspeare.

5. One under the command of another.

I hold it no wisdom to leave unto the Irish chiefs too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law. Spenser.

And forc'd Æneas, when his ships were lost,
To leave his followers on a foreign coast. Dryden.

6. A scholar; an imitator; a copier.

Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ. 1 Corinthians.

The true profession of christianity inviolably engages all its followers to do good to all men. Sprat.

Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have. Locke.

The church of Smyrna professed they worthily loved the martyrs, as the disciples and followers of our Lord; and because of their exceeding great affection to their king and their master. Nelson.

The studious head or gen'rous mind,
Follower of God, or friend of human kind,
Poet or patriot, rose but to restore
The faith and moral nature gave before. Pope.

7. One of the same faction or party.

FO'LLY, fôl'lê. n. s. [folie, Fr.]

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.

This is folly, childhood's guide,
This is childhood at her side. Hawksworth.

2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.

Think'st thou, that duty should have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shaksp.

3. Act of negligence or passion unbecoming gravity or deep wisdom. In this sense it has a plural.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit:
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy. Shaksp.

Thy hum'rous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot. Prior.

Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please. Pope.

To FOME'NT, fô-mênt'. v. a. [fomentor, Lat. fomenter, Fr.]

1. To cherish with heat.

Every kind that lives,
Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd. Milton.

3. To encourage; to support; to cherish.

They love their givings, and foment their deeds no less than parents do their children. Wotton.

Blame then thyself, as reason's law requires,
Since nature gave, and thou foment'st my fires. Dryden.

They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them. Locke.

FOMENTA'TION, fô-mên-tâ'shûn. n. s. [fomentation, Fr. from foment.]

1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stuping, which is applying hot flannels to any part, dipped in medicated decoctions whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and discuss obstructed humours. Quincy.

Fomentation calleth forth the humour by vapours; but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultis, draweth gently the humours out; for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath withal a mixture of some stupefactive. Bacon.

2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.

The medicines were prepared by the physicians, and the lotions or fomentations by the nurses. Arbuthnot.

FOME'NTER, fô-mên'tûr. n. s. [from foment.] One that foments; an encourager; a supporter.

These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politick at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up. Howel.

FON, fôn. n. s. [Scotish. A word now obsolete.] A fool; an idiot.

Sicker I hold him for a greater fon,
That loves the thing he cannot purchase. Spenser.

FOND, fônd. adj. [fon, Scotish. A word of which I have found no satisfactory etymology. To fonne is in Chaucer to doat, to be foolish.]

Tell these sad women,
'Tis fond to wail inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at them. Shakspeare.

Grant I may never prove so fond
To trust man on his oath or bond. Shakspeare.

I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance. Shaksp.

Fond thoughts may fall into some idle brain;
But one belief of all, is ever wise. Davies.

Thou see'st
How subtly to detain thee I devise,
Inviting thee to hear while I relate:
Fond! were it not in hope of thy reply. Milton.

So fond are mortal men,
Fall'n into wrath divine,
As their own ruin on themselves t' invite. Milton.

'Twas not revenge for griev'd Apollo's wrong
Those ass's ears on Midas' temples hung;
But fond repentance of his happy wish. Waller.

But reason with your fond religion fights;
For many gods are many infinites. Dryden.

This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thyself. Tillotson.

2. Trifling; valued by folly.

Not with fond shekles of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose rate are either rich or poor
As fancy values them. Shakspeare.

3. Foolishly tender; injudiciously indulgent.

I'm a foolish fond wife. Addison.

Like Venus I'll shine,
Be fond and be fine. Addison.

4. Pleased in too great a degree; foolishly delighted: with of.

Fame is in itself a real good, if we may believe Cicero, who was perhaps too fond of it. Dryden.

I, fond of my well-chosen seat,
My pictures, medals, books complete. Prior.

Some are so fond to know a great deal at once, and love to talk of things with freedom and boldness before they thoroughly understand them. Watts.

To FOND, fônd. } v. a. [from the
To FO'NDLE, fôn'dl.[405] } adjective.] To treat with great indulgence; to caress; to cocker.

Howe'er unjust your jealousy appear,
It does my pity, not my anger move:
I'll fond it as the froward child of love. Dryden.

When, midst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrian hugs and fonds thee on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms constrains,
Thou may'st infuse the venom in her veins. Dryd.

They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to use any fondling expressions. Swift.

To FOND, fônd. v. n. To be fond of; to be in love with; to dote on.

How will this fadge? My master loves her dearly;
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shaksp.

FO'NDLER, fôn'dl-ûr. n. s. [from fond.] One who fondles.

FO'NDLING, fôn'dl-îng. n. s. [from fondle.] A person or thing much fondled or caressed; something regarded with great affection.

Partiality in a parent is commonly unlucky; for fondlings are in danger to be made fools, and the children that are least cockered make the best and wisest men. L'Estrange.

The bent of our own minds may favour any opinion or action, that may shew it to be a fondling of our own. Locke.

Any body would have guessed miss to have been bred up under a cruel stepdame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbuthnot.

Bred a fondling and an heiress,
Dress'd like any lady may'ress;
Cocker'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

FO'NDLY, fônd'lè. adv. [from fond.]

1. Foolishly; weakly; imprudently; injudiciously.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence. Shak.

The man set the boy upon the ass, and footed it himself. L'Estrange.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try, for once, who can foot it farthest. Dryden.

With them a man sometimes cannot be a penitent, unless he also turns vagabond, and foots it to Jerusalem; or wanders over this or that part of the world, to visit the shrine of such or such a pretended saint. South.

To FOOT, fût.[307] v. a.

1. To spurn; to kick.

You that did void your rheum upon my beard, and foot me as you spurn a stranger cur over your threshold. Shaksp.

2. To settle; to begin to fix.

What confed'racy have you with the traitors
Late footed in the kingdom? Shaksp.

3. To tread.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold:
He met the night-mare, and her name told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right. Shaksp.

There haply by the ruddy damsel seen,
Or shepherd boy, they featly foot the green. Tickel.

4. To hold with the foot. Not in use.

We are the earth, and they,
Like moles within us, heave and cast about;
And till they foot and clutch their prey,
They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.

FOOTBALL, fût'bâll. n. s. [foot and ball.]

1. A ball commonly made of a blown bladder, cased with leather, driven by the foot.

Am I so round with you as you with me,
That like a football you do spurn me thus? Shak.

Such a winter-piece should be beautified with all manner of works and exercises of winter; as footballs, felling of wood, and sliding upon the ice. Peacham.

As when a sort of lusty shepherds try
Their force at football, care of victory
Makes them salute so rudely, breast to breast,
That their encounter seems too rough for jest. Waller.

One rolls along a football to his foes,
One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryden.

2. The sport or practice of kicking the football.

He was sensible the common football was a very imperfect imitation of that exercise. Arbuthnot.

FOOTBOY, fût'bôé. n. s. [foot and boy.] A low menial; an attendant in livery.

Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This honest man, wait like a lowsy footboy
At chamber-door? Shaksp.

Though I had nobody to assist but a footboy, yet I made shift to try a pretty number of things. Boyle

Whenever he imagines advantages will redound to one of his footboys by oppression of me, he never disputes it. Swift.

FOOTBRIDGE, fût'bridje. n. s. [foot and bridge.] A bridge on which passengers walk; a narrow bridge.

Palemon's shepherd, fearing the footbridge was not strong enough, loaded it so long, 'till he broke that which would have born a bigger burden. Sidney.

FOOTCLOTH, fût'klôth. n. s. [foot and cloth.] A sumpter cloth.

Three times a day my footcloth horse did stumble,
And started when he looked upon the Tower,
As loth to bear me to the slaughterhouse. Shaksp.

FOOTED, fût'ëd. adj. [from foot.] Shaped in the foot.

Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat. Grew.

FOOTFIGHT, fût'fite. n. s. [foot and fight.] A fight made on foot, in opposition to that on horseback.

So began our footfight, in such sort, that we were well entered to blood of both sides. Sidney.

FOOTHOLD, fût'hôld. n. s. [foot and hold.] Space to hold the foot; space on which one may tread surely.

All fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it so little foothold, that the first blast laid it flat on the ground. L'Estrange.

He 's at the top: he has nothing above him to aspire to, nor any foothold left him to come down by. L'Estrange.

FOOTING, fût'ting. n. s. [from foot.]

1. Ground for the foot.

I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
As full of peril and advent'rous spirit
As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear. Shaksp.

As Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew she footing found, for all the flood. Davies.

In ascents, every step gained is a footing and help to the next. Holder.

2. Support; root.

Set cloven stakes; and wond'rous to behold,
Their sharpen'd ends in earth their footing place,
And the dry poles produce a living race. Dryden.

3. Basis; foundation.

All those sublime thoughts take their rise and footing here: the mind stirs not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered. Locke.

The reasoning faculties of the soul would not know how to move for want of a foundation and footing in most men, who cannot trace truth to its fountain and original. Locke.

4. Place; possession.

Whether the unctuous exhalations are
Fir'd by the sun, or seeming so alone;
Or each some more remote and slippery star,
Which loses footing when to mortals shewn. Dryden.

5. Tread; walk.

As he forward moved his footing old,
So backward still was turn'd his wrinkled face. Spenser.

I would outnight you, did nobody come:
But hark I hear the footing of a man. Shaksp.

Break off, break off; I feel the different sound
Of some chaste footing near about this ground. Milton.

6. Dance.

Make holyday; your ryestraw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country footing. Shaksp.

7. Steps; road; track.

He grew strong among the Irish; and in his footing his son continuing, hath increased his said name. Spenser.

Like running weeds, that have no certain root; or like footings up and down, impossible to be traced. Bacon.

8. Entrance; beginning; establishment.

Ever since our nation had any footing in this land, the state of England did desire to perfect the conquest. Davies.

The defeat of colonel Bellasis gave them their first footing in Yorkshire. Clarendon.

No useful arts have yet found footing here;
But all untaught and savage does appear. Dryden.

9. State; condition; settlement.

Gaul was on the same footing with Egypt as to taxes. Arbuthnot.

Foo'tlicker, fût'lik-ûr. n. s. [foot and lick.] A slave; an humble fawner; one who licks the foot.

Do that good mischief which may make this island
Thine own for ever; and I thy Caliban,
For aye thy footlicker. Shaksp.

Foo'tman,[88] fût'mân. n. s. [foot and man.]

1. A soldier that marches and fights on foot.

The numbers levied by her lieutenant did consist of footmen three millions, of horsemen one million. Raleigh.

2. A low menial servant in livery.

He was carried in a rich chariot, litterwise, with two horses at either end, and two footmen on each side. Bacon.

Like footmen running before coaches,
To tell the inn what lord approaches. Prior.

3. One who practises to walk or run.

Foo'tmanship, fût'mân-ship. n. s. [from footman.] The art or faculty of a runner.

The Irish archers espying this, suddenly broke up, and committed the safety of their lives to their nimble footmanship. Hayward.

Yet, says the fox, I have baffled more of them with my wiles and shifts than ever you did with your footmanship. L'Estrange.

Foo'tpace, fût'pâse. n. s. [foot and pace.]

1. Part of a pair of stairs, whereon, after four or five steps, you arrive to a broad place, where you make two or three paces before you ascend another step, thereby to ease the legs in ascending the rest of the stairs. Moxon.

2. A pace no faster than a slow walk.

Foo'tpad, fût'pâd. n. s. [foot and pad.] A highwayman that robs on foot, not on horseback.

Foo'tpath, fût'pâth. n. s. [foot and path.] A narrow way which will not admit horses or carriages.

Know'st thou the way to Dover?
—Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath. Shak.

Foo'tpost, fût'pôst. n. s. [foot and post.] A post or messenger that travels on foot.

For carrying such letters every thoroughfare weekly appointeth a footpost, whose dispatch is well near as speedy as the horses. Carew.

Foo'tstall, fût'stâll.[406] n. s. [foot and stall.] A woman's stirrup.

Foo'tstep, fût'stép. n. s. [foot and step.]

1. Trace; track; impression left by the foot.

Clear-sighted reason, wisdom's judgment leads,
And sense, her vassal, in her footsteps treads. Denham.

A man shall never want crooked paths to walk, in, if he thinks that he is in the right way, wherever he has the footsteps of others to follow. Locke.

2. Token; mark; notice given.

Let us turn our thoughts to the frame of our system, if there we may trace any visible footsteps of divine wisdom and beneficence. Bentley.

3. Example.

Foo'tstool, fût'stôôl. n. s. [foot and stool.] Stool on which he that sits places his feet.

Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our footstool of security. Shakspeare.

They whose sacred office 'tis to bring
Kings to obey their God, and men their king,
By these mysterious links to fix and tye
Men to the footstool of the Deity. Denham.

Let echoing anthems make his praises known
On earth, his footstool, as in heaven his throne. Roscommon.

By the phrase of worshipping his footstool, no more is meant than worshipping God at his footstool. Stillingfleet.

Fop, fôp. n. s. [A word probably made by chance, and therefore without etymology.] A simpleton; a coxcomb; a man of small understanding and much ostentation; a pretender; a man fond of show, dress, and flutter; an impertinent.

A whole tribe of fops,
Got' tween asleep and wake. Shakspeare.

When such a positive abandon'd fop,
Among his numerous absurdities,
Stumbles upon some tolerable line,
I fret to see them in such company. Roscommon.

The leopard's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat. L'Estrange.

In a dull stream, which moving slow,
You hardly see the current flow;
When a small breeze obstructs the course,
It whirls about for want of force,
And in its narrow circle gathers
Nothing but chaff, and straws, and feathers:
The current of a female mind
Stops thus, and turns with ev'ry wind;
Thus whirling round, together draws
Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws. Swift.

Fo'ppoodle, fôp'dôô-dl. n. s. [fop and doodle.] A fool; an insignificant wretch.

Where sturdy butchers broke your noddle,
And handled you like a fopdoodle. Hudibras.

Fo'ppery, fôp'ûr-é.[557] n. s. [from fop.]

1. Folly; impertinence.

Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter
My sober house. Shakspeare.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despight of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shakspeare.

This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains on necessity. Shakspeare.

2. Affectation of show or importance; showy folly.

3. Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affectation.

They thought the people were better let alone in their fopperies, than to be suffered to break loose from that subjection which your superstition kept them in. Stillingfleet.

But though we fetch from Italy and France
Our fopperies of tune and modes of dance,
Our sturdy Britons scorn to borrow sense. Granv.

I wish I could say quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects. Swift.

Fo'ppish, fôp'pish. adj. [from fop.]

1. Foolish; idle; vain.

Fools ne'er had less grace in a year;
For wise men are grown foppish,
And know not how their wits to wear,
Their manners are so apish. Shakspeare.

2. Vain in show; foolishly ostentatious; vain of dress.

With him the present still some virtues have;
The vain are sprightly, and the stupid grave;
The slothful negligent, the foppish neat;
The lewd are airy, and the sly discreet. Garth.

The Romans grew extremely expensive and foppish; so that the emperor Aurelian forbid men that variety of colours on their shoes, allowing it still to women. Arbuthnot.

You would know who is rude and ill-natured, who is vain and foppish, who lives too high, and who is in debt. Law.

Fo'ppishly, fôp'pish-lé. adv. [from foppish.] Vainly; ostentatiously.

Fo'ppishness, fôp'pish-nês. n. s. [from foppish.] Vanity; showy or ostentatious vanity.

Fo'ppling, fôp'ling.[409 410] n. s. [from fop.] A petty fop; an under-rate coxcomb.

Thy works in Chloe's toilet gain a part,
And, with his taylor, share the foppling's heart. Tickel.

For, fôr.[167] prep. [ꝑop, Sax. voor, Dut.]

1. Because of.

That which we for our unworthiness are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God for the worthiness of his Son would notwithstanding vouchsafe to grant. Hooker.

Edward and Richard,
With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,
Are at our backs. Shakspeare.

Speak, good Cominius;
Leave nothing out for length. Shakspeare.

For as much as the question cannot be scanned, unless the time of Abraham's journey be considered of, I will search into a tradition concerning his travels. Raleigh.

An astrologer saith, if it were not for two things that are constant, no individual would last one moment. Bacon.

For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any other provocation, make war upon christendom for the propagation of their laws; so the christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the prevention. Bacon.

The governour sallying out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for haste left behind them. Knolles.

Their offer he willingly accepted, knowing that he was not able to keep that place three days for lack of victuals. Knolles.

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,
This cannot take her:
If of herself she will not love,
Nothing can make her. Suckling.

Care not for frowns or smiles. Denham.

The hypocrite or carnal man hopes, and is the wickeder for hoping. Hammond.

Let no man, for his own poverty, become more oppressing in his bargains: but quietly recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him. Taylor.

Persons who have lost most of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, wore them so low, that the inward nerve lay bare, and they would no longer for pain make use of them. Ray.

I but revenge my fate; disdain'd, betray'd,
And suff'ring death for this ungrateful maid. Dryd.

Sole on the barren sands, the suff'ring chief,
Roar'd out for anguish and indulg'd his grief. Dryden.

For his long absence church and state did groan,
Madness the pulpit, faction seiz'd the throne. Dryden.

Nor with a superstitious fear is aw'd
For what befalls at home, or what abroad. Dryd.

I, my own judge, condemn'd myself before;
For pity, aggravate my crime no more. Dryden.

Matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burnt th' imperial town,
Shriek'd for the downfal in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die. Dryden.

Children, discountenanced by their parents for any fault, find a refuge in the caresses of foolish flatterers. Locke.

A sound mind in a sound body is a short but full description of a happy state in this world: he that has these two has little more to wish for, and he that wants either of them will be but little the better for any thing else. Locke.

The middle of the gulph is remarkable for tempests. Addison.

My open'd thought to joyous prospects raise,
And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise. Prior.

Which best or worst you could not think;
And die you must for want of drink. Prior.

It is a most infamous scandal upon the nation, to reproach them for treating foreigners with contempt. Swift.

We can only give them that liberty now for something, which they have so many years exercised for nothing, of railing and scribbling against us. Swift.

Your sermons will be less valuable, for want of time. Swift.

2. With respect to; with regard to.

Rather our state's defective for requital,
Than we to stretch it out. Shaksp.

A paltry ring
That she did give me, whose poesy was,
For all the world, like cutler's poetry
Upon a knife; love me and leave me not. Shaksp.

For all the world,
As thou art at this hour, was Richard then. Shaksp.

It was young counsel for the persons, and violent counsel for the matters. Bacon.

Authority followeth old men, and favour and popularity youth; but for the moral part, perhaps, youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the politick. Bacon.

Comets are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet for magnitude or colour, produceth what kind of effects. Bacon.

For me, if there be such a thing as I. Waller.

He saith these honours consisted in preserving their memories, and praising their virtues; but for any matter of worship towards them, he utterly denies it. Stillingfleet.

Our laws were for their matter foreign. Hale.

Now for the government, it is absolute monarchy; there being no other laws in China but the king's command. Temple.

For me, no other happiness I own,
Than to have born no issue to the throne. Dryden.

For me, my stormy voyage at an end,
I to the port of death securely tend. Dryden.

After death, we sprights have just such natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures. Dryden.

Such little wasps, and yet so full of spite;
For bulk mere insects, yet in mischief strong. Tate.

Hobbes has given us a correct explanation of the sense in general; but for particulars and circumstances, he continually lops them. Pope.

Lo, some are vellom, and the rest as good,
For all his lordship knows, but they are wood. Pope.

3. In this sense it has often as before it.

As for Maramaldus the general, they had no just cause to mislike him, being an old captain of great experience. Knolles.

4. In the character of.

If a man can be fully assured of any thing for a truth, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth? Locke.

She thinks you favour'd:
But let her go for an ungrateful woman. A. Philips.

Say, is it fitting in this very field,
This field, where from my youth I've been a carter,
I, in this field, should die for a deserter? Gay

5. With resemblance of.

I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,
The gentle York is up. Shakspeare.

Now, now for sure, deliverance is at hand,
The kingdom shall to Israel be restor'd. Milton.

The startling steed was seiz'd with sudden fright,
And, bounding, o'er the pommel cast the knight:
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet and lay for dead. Dryd.

6. Considered as; in the place of.

Our present lot appears
For happy, though but ill; for ill, not worst,
If we procure not to ourselves more woe. Milton.

The counsel-table and star-chamber held for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which profited. Clarendon.

7. In advantage of; for the sake of.

An ant is a wise creature for itself: but it is a shrewd thing in an orchard. Bacon.

27. In hope of; for the sake of: noting the final cause.

How quickly nature
Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish, over-careful fathers,
Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care,
Their bones with industry: for this engross'd
The canker'd heaps of strong atchieved gold:
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Shaksp.

The kingdom of God was first rent by ill counsel; upon which counsel there are set, for our instruction, two marks. Bacon.

Whether some hero's fate,
In words worth dying for, he celebrate. Cowley.

To let you know my thoughts. Shaksp.

Th' offers he doth make,
Were not for him to give, nor them to take. Daniel.

It were more for his honour to raise his siege, than to spend so many good men in the winning of it by force. Knolles.

Jests for Dutch men and English boys. Cowley.

Is it for you to ravish seas and land,
Unauthorized by my supreme command! Dryden.

His sire already signs him for the skies,
And marks the seat amidst the deities. Dryden.

It is a reasonable account for any man to give, why he does not live as the greatest part of the world do, that he has no mind to die as they do, and perish with them. Tillotson.

33. Notwithstanding.

This, for any thing we know to the contrary, might be the self-same form which Philojudæus expresseth. Hooker.

God's desertion shall, for ought he knows, the next minute supervene. Decay of Piety.

Probability supposes that a thing may or may not be so, for any thing yet certainly determined on either side. South.

For any thing that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a contrivance to fright us. Swift.

If such vast masses of matter had been situated nearer to the sun, or to each other, as they might as easily have been, for any mechanical or fortuitous agent, they must necessarily have caused a considerable disorder in the whole system. Bentley.

34. To the use of; to be used in.

The oak for nothing ill,
The osier good for twigs, the poplar for the mill. Spenser.

Your understandings are not bright enough for the exercise of the highest acts of reason. Tillotson.

35. In consequence of.

For love they force through thickets of the wood,
They climb the steepy hills and stem the flood. Dryd.

36. In recompense of; in return of.

Now, for so many glorious actions done,
For peace at home, and for the publick wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl for Cæsar's health;
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators. Dryd.

First the wily wizard must be caught;
For unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for naught. Dryden.

37. In proportion to.

He is not very tall, yet for his years he's tall. Shaksp.

As he could see clear for those times, through superstition; so he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy. Bacon.

Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!
Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;
Too noble for revenge. Dryden.

38. By means of; by interposition of.

Moral consideration can no way move the sensible appetite, were it not for the will. Hale.

Of some calamity we can have no relief but from God alone; and what would men do in such a case, if it were not for God? Tillotson.

39. In regard of; in preservation of. I cannot for my life, is, I cannot if my life might be saved by it.

I bid the rascal knock upon your gate;
But could not get him for my heart. Shaksp.

I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pasted upon the walls. Addison.

40. For all; notwithstanding.

Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure you, for all my apparel, there is nothing I desire more than fully to prove myself a man in this enterprize. Sidney.

For all the carefulness of the christians, the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up. Knolles.

But as Noah's pigeon, which returned no more,
Did shew she footing found for all the flood. Davies.

They resolute, for all this, do proceed
Unto that judgment. Daniel.

If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the emperour of China or Japan, we are well enough contented, for all that, to let them govern at home. Stillingfleet.

Though that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will, for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account. Boyle.

She might have passed over my businesses; but my rabble is not to be mumbled up in silence, for all her pertness. Dryden.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition. South.

41. For to. In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before to the sign of the infinitive mood, to note the final cause. As I come for to see you, for I love to see you: in the same sense with the French pour. Thus it is used in the translation of the Bible. But this distinction was by the best writers sometimes forgotten; and, for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous, is now always omitted.

Who shall let me now
On this vile body for to wreak my wrong! Fairy Queen.

A large posterity
Up to your happy palaces may mount,
Of blessed saints for to increase the count. Spenser.

These things may serve for to represent how just cause of fear this kingdom may have towards Spain. Bacon.

For, fôr. conj.

1. The word by which the reason is introduced of something advanced before.

Heav'n doth with us as we with torches deal,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Shaksp.

Old husbandmen I at Sabinum know,
Who for another year dig, plough, and sow;
For never any man was yet so old,
But hop'd his life one winter more would hold. Denham.

Tell me what kind of thing is wit:
For the first matter loves variety less. Cowley.

Thus does he foolishly who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living God. Tillotson.

2. Because; on this account that. It is in this sense properly followed by that, and without it is elliptical. This sense is almost obsolete.

I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men. Spenser.

Jealous souls will not be answered so:
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they 're jealous. Shaksp.

Heaven defend your good souls, that you think
I will your serious and great business scant;
For she is with me. Shaksp.

Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had laid:
But, for his great Creator would the same,
His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame. Fairfax.

Many excrescences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance. Bacon.

3. For as much. In regard to that; in consideration of.

For as much as in public prayer we are not only to consider what is needful, in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard; we somewhat incline to length, lest over-quick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of. Hooker.

For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spaw water. Arbuthnot.

4. For why. Because; for this reason that.

Solyman had three hundred field pieces; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperor into battle, had brought no pieces of battery with him. Knolles.

To Fo'rage, fôr'âje.[168] v. n. [from foris, abroad, Latin.]

1. To wander far; to rove at a distance. Not in use.

Forage, and run
To meet displeasure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him, ere he come so nigh. Shak.

2. To wander in search of spoil, generally of provisions.

As in a stormy night,
Wolves, urged by their raging appetite,
Forage for prey. Denham.

There was a brood of young larks in the corn, and the dam went abroad to forage for them. L'Estrange.

Nor dare they stray
When rain is promis'd or a stormy day;
But near the city walls their wat'ring take,
Nor forage far, but short excursions make. Dryden.

3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.

His most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp
Forage in blood of French nobility. Shaksp.

To FO'RAGE, fôr'âje. v. a. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.

They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual holds for her majesty, if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy to forage and over-run the whole land. Spenser.

The victorious Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army. South.

FO'RAGE, fôr'âje.[90] n. s. [fourage, German and French; from foris, Latin.]

1. Search of provisions; the act of feeding abroad.

One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,
Ewes and their bleating lambs, over the plains
Their booty. Milton.

2. Provisions sought abroad.

Some o'er the public magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden.

3. Provisions in general.

Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd. Dryd.

FORA'MINOUS, fô-râm'ê-nûs. adj. [from foramen, Lat.] Full of holes; perforated in many places; porous.

Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the sound, will deaden it; but in the passage of the sound they will admit it better than harder bodies. Bacon.

To FORBE'AR, fôr-bâre.' v. n. pret. I forbore, anciently forbare; part. forborn, [ꝑoꝛbæꝛnan, Saxon. For has in composition the power of privation; as, forbear: or deprivation; as, forswear, and other powers not easily explained.]

1. To cease from any thing; to intermit.

Who can forbear to admire and adore him who weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance. Cheyne.

2. To pause; to delay.

I pray you, tarry: pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong,
I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shaksp.

3. To omit voluntarily; not to do; to abstain.

He forbare to go forth. 1 Samuel.

At this he started, and forbore to swear;
Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear. Dryden.

The wolf, the lion, and the bear,
When they their prey in pieces tear,
To quarrel with themselves forbear. Denham.

4. To restrain any violence of temper; to be patient.

By long forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone. Proverbs.

To FORBE'AR, fôr-bâre'.[240] v. a.

1. To decline; to avoid voluntarily.

Forbear his presence, until time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure. Shaksp.

So angry bulls the combat do forbear,
When from the wood a lion does appear. Waller.

2. To abstain from; to shun to do; to omit.

If it passed only by the house of peers, it should be looked upon as invalid and void, and execution should be thereupon forborn or suspended. Clarendon.

There is not any one action whatsoever which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the Scripture will give him a clear precept or prohibition for it. South.

3. To spare; to treat with clemency.

With all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love. Eph.

4. To withhold.

Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not. 2 Chronicles.

FORBE'ARANCE, fôr-bâre'ânse. n. s. [from forbear.]

1. The care of avoiding or shunning any thing; negation of practice.

True nobleness would
Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong. Shak.

This may convince us how vastly greater a pleasure is consequent upon the forbearance of sin, than can possibly accompany the commission of it. South.

Liberty is the power a man has to do, or forbear doing, any particular action, according as its doing or forbearance has the actual preference in the mind. Locke.

2. Intermission of something.

3. Command of temper.

Have a continent forbearance, 'till the speed of his rage goes slower. Shaksp.

4. Lenity; delay of punishment; mildness.

Nor do I take notice of this instance of severity in our own country to justify such a proceeding, but only to display the mildness and forbearance made use of under the reign of his present majesty. Addison.

He applies to our gratitude by obligations of kindness and beneficence, of long suffering and forbearance. Rogers.

FORBE'ARER, fôr-bâ'rûr. n. s. [from forbear.] An intermitter; interceptor of any thing.

The west as a father all goodness doth bring,
The east a forbearer no manner of thing. Tusser.

To FORBI'D, fôr-bîd'. v. a. pret. I forbade; part. forbidden or forbid. [ꝑoꝛbeoban, Saxon; verbieden, Dutch.]

1. To prohibit; to interdict any thing.

A witch, a quean, an old cozening quean; have I not forbid her my house? Shaksp.

It is
The practice and the purpose of the king,
From whose obedience I forbid my soul. Shaksp.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.

The voice of reason, in all the dictates of natural morality, ought carefully to be attended to, by a strict observance of what it commands, but especially of what it forbids. South.

All hatred of persons, by very many christian principles, we are most solemnly and indispensably forbid. Sprat.

The chaste and holy race
Are all forbidden this polluted place. Dryden.

2. To command; to forbear any thing.

She with so sweet a rigour forbad him, that he durst not rebel. Sidney.

They have determined to consume all those things that God hath forbidden them to eat by his laws. Judith.

3. To oppose; to hinder.

The moisture being forbidden to come up in the plant, stayeth longer in the root, and so dilateth it. Bacon.

The plaster alone would pen the humour and so exasperate it, as well as forbid new humour. Bacon.

Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the sight!
O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
And search no farther than thyself reveal'd. Dryd.

4. To accurse; to blast. Now obsolete. To bid is in old language to pray; to forbid therefore is to curse.

Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid;
He shall live a man forbid. Shaksp.

To FORBI'D, fôr-bîd'. v. n. To utter a prohibition.

Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome
Should now eat up her own! Shaksp.

FORBI'DDANCE, fôr-bîd-dânse. n. s. [from forbid.] Prohibition; edict against any thing.

How hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance! how to violate
The sacred fruit forbidden! Milton.

FORBI'DDENLY, fôr-bîd'd'n-lê. adv. [from forbid.] In an unlawful manner.

With all confidence he swears, as he had seen 't,
That you have touch'd his queen forbiddenly. Shaksp.

FORBI'DDER, fôr-bîd'dûr. n. s. [from forbid.] One that prohibits; one that enacts a prohibition.

This was a bold accusation of God, making the fountain of good the contriver of evil, and the forbidder of the crime an abettor of the fact prohibited. Brown.

Other care, perhaps,
May have diverted from continual watch
Our great forbidder! Milton.

FORBI'DDING, fôr-bîd'ding. participial adj. [from forbid.] Raising abhorrence; repelling approach; causing aversion.

Tragedy was made forbidding and horrible. A. Hill.

FORCE, fôrse. n. s. [force, Fr. fortis, Lat.]

1. Strength; vigour; might; active power.

He never could maintain his part but in the force of his will. Shaksp.

A ship, which hath struck sail, doth run
By force of that force which before it won. Donne.

2. Violence.

Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown,
Which now they hold by force, and not by right. Shaksp.

The shepherd Paris bore the Spartan bride
By force away, and then by force enjoy'd;
But I by free consent. Dryden.

3. Virtue; efficacy.

Manifest it is, that the very majesty and holiness of the place where God is worshipped, hath in regard of us, great virtue, force, and efficacy; for that it serveth as a sensible help to stir up devotion. Hooker.

No definitions, no suppositions of any sect, are of force enough to destroy constant experience. Locke.

4. Validness; power of law.

A testament is of force after men are dead. Hebrews.

Not long in force this charter stood,
Wanting that seal, it must be seal'd in blood. Denham.

5. Armament; warlike preparation. Often forces in the plural.

O thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye. Shaksp.

The secret of the power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations. Bacon.

A greater force than that which here we find,
Ne'er press'd the ocean, nor employ'd the wind.
Waller.

Those victorious forces of the rebels were not able to sustain your arms. Dryden.

6. Destiny; necessity; fatal compulsion.

To Force, fôrse. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compel; to constrain.

Dangers are light, if they once seem light; and more dangers have deceived men than forced them. Bacon

I have been forced to use the cant words of Whig and Tory. Swift.

The actions and operations did force them upon dividing the single idea. Broome.

2. To overpower by strength.

O that fortune
Had brought me to the field where thou art fam'd
To have wrought such wonders with an ass's jaw,
I should have forc'd thee soon with other arms.
Milton.

With fates averse, the rout in arms resort
To force their monarch, and insult the court. Dryd.

3. To impel; to press; to draw or push by main strength.

Thou shalt not destroy the trees by forcing an ax against them. Deuteronomy.

Stooping, the spear descended on his chine,
Just where the bone distinguish'd either loin:
It stuck so fast, so deeply bury'd lay,
That scarce the victor forc'd the steel away. Dryd.

4. To enforce; to urge.

Three blust'ring nights, born by the southern blast,
I floated, and discovered land at last:
High on a mounting wave my head I bore,
Forcing my strength, and gath'ring to the shore.
Dryden.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sere,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
And with forc'd fingers rude
Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year.
Milton.

5. To drive by violence or power.

This way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions.
Decay of Piety.

To free the ports, and ope the Punique land
To Trojan guests; lest ignorant of fate,
The queen might force them from her town and state. Dryden.

6. To gain by violence or power.

My heart is yours; but, oh! you left it here
Abandon'd to those tyrants hope and fear;
If they forc'd from me one kind look or word,
Could you not that, nor that small part afford. Dryd.

7. To storm; to take or enter by violence.

Troy wall'd so high,
Atrides might as well have forc'd the sky. Waller.

Heav'n from all ages wisely did provide
This wealth, and for the bravest nation hide;
Who with four hundred foot, and forty horse,
Dare boldly go a new-found world to force. Dryd.

8. To ravish; to violate by force.

Force her.—I like it not. Dryden.

9. To constrain; to distort; not to obtain naturally or with ease.

Our general taste in England is for epigram, turns of wit, and forced conceits. Addison.

10. To man; to strengthen by soldiers; to garrison.

Here let them lye
'Till famine and the ague eat them up:
Were they not forc'd with those that should be our's,
We might have met them dareful, beard to beard.
Shaksp.

If you find that any great number of soldiers be newly sent into Oroonoque, and that the passages be already forced, then be well advised how you land. Raleigh.

11. To Force out. To extort.

The heat of the dispute had forced out from Luther expressions that seemed to make his doctrine run higher than really it did. Atterbury.

To Force, fôrse. v. n. To lay stress upon. This word I have only found in the following passage.

That morning that he was to join battle with Harold, his armorer put on his backpiece before and his breastplate behind; the which being espied by some that stood by, was taken among them for an ill token, and therefore advised him not to fight that day; to whom the duke answered, I force not of such fooleries, but if I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change copy from a duke to a king.
Camden.

Fo'rcedly, fôr'sêd-lê.[364] adv. [from force.] Violently; constrainedly; unnaturally.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters doth most aptly agree to that structure of the abyss and antediluvian earth; but very improperly and forcedly to the present form of the earth and the waters.
Burnet.

Fo'rceful, fôrse'fûl. adj. [force and full.] Violent; strong; driven with great might; impetuous.

Why, what need we
Commune with you of this, but rather follow
Our forceful instigation? Shaksp.

Against the steed he threw
His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden.

Were it by chance, or forceful destiny,
Which forms in causes first whate'er shall be,
Assisted by a friend one moonless night,
This Palemon from prison took his flight. Dryd.

He pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent,
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went.
Pope.

Fo'rcefully, fôrse'fûl-ê. adv. [from forceful.] Violently; impetuously.

Fo'rceless, fôrse'lês. adj. [from force.] Having little force; weak; feeble; impotent.

FO'RCEPS, fôr'sêps. n. s. [Latin.]

Forceps properly signifies a pair of tongs; but is used for an instrument in chirurgery, to extract any thing out of wounds, and the like occasions.
Quincy.

Fo'rcer, fôre'sûr. n. s. [from force.]

1. That which forces, drives, or constrains.

2. The embolus of a pump working by pulsion, in contradistinction to a sucker, which acts by attraction.

The usual means for the ascent of water is either by suckers or forcers. Wilkins.

Fo'rcible, fôre'sê-bl. adj. [from force.]

1. Strong; mighty: opposed to weak.

That punishment, which hath been sometimes forcible to bridle sin, may grow afterwards too weak and feeble. Hooker.

Who therefore can invent
With what more forcible we may offend
Our yet unwounded enemies? Milton.

2. Violent; impetuous.

Jersey, belov'd by all: for all must feel
The influence of a form and mind,
Where comely grace and constant virtue dwell,
Like mingl'd streams more forcible when join'd:
Jersey shall at thy altars stand,
Shall there receive the azure band. Prior.

3. Efficacious; active; powerful.

Sweet smells are most forcible in dry substances, when broken; and so likewise in oranges, the ripping of their rind giveth out their smell more.
Bacon.

4. Prevalent; of great influence.

How forcible are right words. Job.

God hath assured us, that there is no inclination or temptation so forcible which our humble prayers and desires may not frustrate and break asunder.
Raleigh.

5. Done by force; suffered by force.

He swifter far
Me overtook, his mother all dismay'd,
And in embraces forcible and foul
Ingend'ring with me. Milton.

The abdication of king James, the advocates on that side look upon to have been forcible and unjust, and consequently void. Swift.

6. Valid; binding; obligatory.

Fo'rcibleness, fôre'sê-bl-nês. n. s. [from forcible.] Force; violence.

Fo'rcibly, fôre'sê-blê. adv. [from forcible.]

1. Strongly; powerfully.

2. Impetuously; with great strength.

3. By violence; by force.

He himself with greedy great desire
Into the castle entered forcibly. Fairy Queen.

The taking and carrying away of women forcibly, and against their will, except female wards and bondwomen, was made capital. Bacon.

This doctrine brings us down to the level of horse and mule, whose mouths are forcibly holden with bit and bridle. Hammond.

Fo'rcipated, fôr'sê-pâ-têd. adj. [from forceps.] Formed like a pair of pincers to open and enclose.

The locusts have antennæ, or long horns before, with a long falcation or forcipated tail behind.
Brown.

When they have seized their prey, they will so tenaciously hold it with their forcipated mouth, that they will not part therewith, even when taken out of the waters. Derham.

FORD, fôrd. n. s. [ꝼoꝛð, Saxon, from ꝼaꝛan, to pass.]

1. A shallow part of a river where it may be passed without swimming.

Her men the paths rode through made by her sword;
They pass the stream, when she had found the ford.
Fairfax.

2. It sometimes signifies the stream, the current, without any consideration of passage or shallowness.

Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards
The ford, and of itself the water flies
All taste of living wight. Milton.

Rise, wretched widow! rise; nor undeplor'd
Permit my ghost to pass the Stygian ford:
But rise prepar'd in black to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.

To Ford. fôrd. v. a. [from the noun.] To pass without swimming.

Adam's shin-bones must have contained a thousand fathom, and much more, if he had forded the ocean. Raleigh.

Fording his current where thou find'st it low.
Denham.

Fo'rdable, fôrd'â-bl. adj. [from ford.] Passable without swimming

Pliny placeth the Schenitæ upon the Euphrates, where the same beginneth to be fordable. Raleigh.

A countryman sounded a river up and down, to try where it was most fordable; and where the water ran too smooth, he found it deepest, and on the contrary, shallowest where it made most noise
L'Estrange.

FORE, fôre. adj. [ꝼoꝛe, Sax.]

1. Anteriour; that which is before; not behind.

Though there is an orb or spherical area of the sound, yet they move strongest and go farthest in the fore lines from the first local impression. Bacon.

2. That which comes first in a progressive motion.

Resistance in fluids arises from their greater pressing on the fore than hind part of the bodies moving in them. Cheyne.

FORE, fôre. adv.

1. Anteriourly; in the part which appears first to those that meet it.

Each of them will bear six demiculverins and four sakers, needing no other addition than a slight spar deck fore and aft, which is a slight deck throughout. Raleigh.

2. Fore is a word much used in composition to mark priority of time, of which some examples shall be given. A vitious orthography has confounded for and fore in composition.

To FOREADVI'SE, fôre-âd-vîze'.[499] v. n. [fore and advise.] To counsel early; to counsel before the time of action, or the event.

Thus to have said,
As you were foreadvis'd, had touch'd his spirit,
And tried his inclination. Shaksp.

To FOREAPPO'INT, fôre-âp-pôint'. v. n. [fore and appoint.] To order beforehand.

To FOREA'RM, fôre-ârm'. v. a. [fore and arm.] To provide for attack or resistance before the time of need.

A man should fix and forearm his mind with this persuasion, that, during his passion, whatsoever is offered to his imagination tends only to deceive. South.

He forearms his care
With rules to push his fortune, or to bear. Dryden.

To FOREBO'DE, fôre-bôde'. v. n. [fore and bode.]

1. To prognosticate; to foretell.

An ancient augur, skill'd in future fate,
With these foreboding words restrains their hate. Dryden.

2. To foreknow; to be prescient of; to feel a secret sense of something future.

Fate makes you deaf, while I in vain implore:
My heart forebodes I ne'er shall see you more. Dryden.

My soul foreboded I should find the bow'r
Of some fell monster, fierce with barb'rous pow'r. Pope.

FOREBO'DER, fôre-bôde'ûr. n. s. [from forebode.]

1. A prognosticator; a soothsayer.

Your raven has a reputation in the world for a bird of omen, and a kind of small prophet: a crow that had observed the raven's manner and way of delivering his predictions, sets up for a foreboder. L'Estrange.

2. A foreknower.

FOREBY'. fôre-bî'. prep. [fore and by.] Near; hard by; fast by.

Not far away he hence doth won

1. To scheme; to plan before execution.

He shall forecast his devices against the strong holds. Daniel.

2. To adjust; to contrive antecedently.

The feast was serv'd; the time so well forecast,
That just when the dessert and fruits were plac'd,
The fiends alarm began. Dryden.

3. To foresee; to provide against.

It is wisdom to consider the end of things before we embark, and to forecast consequences. L'Estrange.

To FORECA'ST, fôre-kâst'. v. n. To form schemes; to contrive beforehand.

And whatso heavens in their secret doom
Ordained have, how can frail fleshy wight
Forecast, but it must needs to issue come? Spenser.
When broad awake, she finds in troublous flit,
Forecasting how his foe he might annoy. Fairy Queen.

FORECA'ST, fôre'kâst.[492] n. s. [from the verb.] Contrivance beforehand; scheme; plan; antecedent policy.

Alas! that Warwick had no more forecast,
But while he thought to steal the single ten,
The king was slily finger'd from the deck! Shaksp.
He makes this difference to arise from the forecast and predetermination of the gods. Addison.
The last, scarce ripen'd into perfect man,
Saw helpless him from whom their life began:
Mem'ry and forecast just returns engage;
That pointed back to youth, this on to age. Pope.

FORECA'STER, fôre-kâst'ûr. n. s. [from forecast.] One who contrives beforehand.

FO'RECASTLE, fôre'kâs-sl. n. s. [fore and castle.] In a ship, is that part where the foremast stands, and is divided from the rest of the floor by a bulkhead: that part of the forecastle which is aloft, and not in the hold, is called the prow. Harris.

The commodity of the new cook-room the merchants have found to be so great, as that, in all their ships, the cookrooms are built in their forecastles, contrary to that which had been anciently used. Raleigh.

FORECHO'SEN, fôre-tshô'z'n. part. [fore and chosen.] Pre-elected.

FORECI'TED, fôre-sî'têd. part. [fore and cite.] Quoted before, or above.

For rocky Scylla. Chapman.

To FOREDESI'GN, fôre-dê-sîne'. v. a. [fore and design.] To plan beforehand.

All the steps of the growth and vegetation both of animals and plants, have been foreseen and foredesigned by the wise Author of nature. Cheyne.

To FOREDO', fôre-dôô'. v. a. [from for and do, not fore.]

1. To ruin; to destroy. A word obsolete. Opposed to making happy.

Beseeching him, if either salves or oils,
A foredone wight from door of death might raise,
He would at her request prolong her nephew's days. Fairy Queen.

That drew on men God's hatred and his wrath,
And many souls in endless woes had foredone. F. Queen.
This doth betoken,
The corse they follow did with desperate hand
Foredo its own life. Shaksp.
This is the night
That either makes me or foredoes me quite. Shakspeare.

2. To overdo; to weary; to harass.

Whilst the heavy ploughman snoars,
All with weary task foredone. Shaksp.

To FOREDO'OM, fôre-dôô'm'. v. a. [fore and doom.] To predestinate; to determine beforehand.

Through various hazards and events we move
To Latium, and the realms foredoom'd by Jove. Dryden.
The willing metal will obey thy hand
Following with ease: if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state. Dryden.
Fate foredoom'd, and all things tend
By course of time to their appointed end. Dryden.
Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.

FORE-E'ND, fôre'ênd. n. s. [fore and end.] The anteriour part.

I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid
More pious debts to heaven than in all
The fore-end of my time. Shaksp.
In the fore-end of it, which was towards him, grew a small green branch of palm. Bacon.

FOREFA'THER, fôre-fâ'тнûr. n. s. [fore and father.] Ancestor; one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge. Hooker.
If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor. Raleigh.
Conceit is still deriv'd
From some forefather grief: mine is not so. Shak.
Shall I not be distraught,
And madly play with my forefather's joints. Shak.
Our great forefathers,
Had left him nought to conquer but his country. Addison.
When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way. Addison.
Blest peer! his great forefather's ev'ry grace
Reflecting, and reflected in his race. Pope.

To FOREFE'ND, fôre-fênd'. v. a. [It is doubtful whether from fore or for and defend. If from fore, it implies antecedent provision; as forearm: if from for, prohibitory security; as forbid. Of the two following examples one favours for; and the other fore.

1. To prohibit; to avert.

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No, heav'ns forefend! I would not kill thy soul. Shaksp.
Perhaps a fever, which the gods forefend,
May bring your youth to some untimely end. Dryden.

2. To provide for; to secure.

Down with the nose,
Down with it flat: take the bridge quite away
Of him, that, his particular to forefend,
Smells from the gen'ral weal. Shaksp.

FOREFI'NGER, fôre'fing-gûr. n. s. [fore and finger.] The finger next to the thumb: the index.

An agate stone
On the forefinger of an alderman. Shaksp.

Polymnia shall be drawn, as it were acting her speech with her forefinger. Peacham.

Some wear this on the middle-finger, as the ancient Gauls and Britons; and some upon the forefinger. Brown.

FO'REFOOT, fôre'fût. n. s. plur. forefeet. [fore and foot.] The anteriour foot of a quadruped: in contempt, a hand.

Give me thy fist; thy forefoot to me give. Shak.

He ran fiercely, and smote at Heliodorus with his forefeet. 2 Maccabees.

I continue my line from thence to the heel; then making the breast with the eminency thereof, bring out his near forefoot, which I finish. Peacham.

To FOREGO', fôre-gô'. v. a. [fore and go.]

1. To quit; to give up; to resign.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humble foe?
If nature, then she may it mend with skill;
If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser.

Having all before absolutely in his power, it remaineth so still, he having already neither foregiven nor foregone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them. Spenser.

He is a great adventurer, said he,
That hath his sword through hard essay foregone;
And now hath vowed 'till he avenged be
Of that despite, never to weareu none. F. Queen.

Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to leave one for another's sake, to forego meaner for the attainment of higher degrees. Hooker.

Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego
So good, so noble, and so true a master? Shaksp.
Let us not forego
That for a trifle which was bought with blood.
Shaksp.

How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse and love so dearly join'd,
To live again in these wild woods forlorn!
Milton.

This argument might prevail with you to forego a little of your repose for the publick benefit.
Dryden.

What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another; and therefore they see nothing in it, for which they should forego a present enjoyment.
Locke.

2. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]

By our remembrances of days foregone,
Such were our faults; O! then we thought them not.
Shaksp.

It is to be understood of Cain, that many years foregone and when his people were increased, he built the city of Enoch Raleigh.

Reflect upon the two foregoing objections.
Boyle.

This foregoing remark gives the reason why imitation pleases. Dryden.

I was seated in my elbow-chair, where I had indulged the foregoing speculations. Addison.

In the foregoing part of this work I promised proofs. Woodward.

3. To lose.

This is the very ecstacy of love,
Whose violent property foregoes itself,
And leads the will to desperate undertakings.
Shakspeare.

FOREGO'ER, fôre-gô'ûr. n. s. [from forego.] Ancestor; progenitor.

Honours best thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive
Than our foregoers. Shakspeare.

FO'REGROUND, fôre'grôûnd. n. s. [fore and ground.] The part of the field or expanse of a picture which seems to lie before the figures.

All agree that white can subsist on the foreground of the picture: the question therefore is to know, if it can equally be placed upon that which is backward, the light being universal, and the figures supposed to be in an open field. Dryden.

FO'REHAND, fôre'hând. n. s. [fore and hand.]

1. The part of a horse which is before the rider.

2. The chief part. Not in use.

The great Achilles whom opinion crowns
The sinew and the forehand of our host. Shaksp.

FO'REHAND, fôre'hând. adj. Done sooner than is regular.

You'll say she did embrace me as a husband,
And so extenuate the forehand sin. Shaksp.

FOREHA'NDED, fôre'hând-êd. adj. [from fore and hand.]

1. Early; timely.

If by thus doing you have not secured your time by an early and forehanded care, yet be sure, by a timely diligence, to redeem the time. Taylor.

2. Formed in the fi reparts.

He 's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely forehanded: mark but the cleanness of his shapes too.
Dryden.

FO'REHEAD, fôr'hêd.[515] n. s. [fore and head.]

1. That part of the face which reaches from the eyes upward to the hair.

The breast of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending. Shakspeare.

Some angel copy'd, while I slept, each grace,
And moulded ev'ry feature from my face:
Such majesty does from her forehead rise,
Her cheeks such blushes cast, such rays her eyes.
Dryden.

2. Impudence; confidence; assurance; audaciousness; audacity. The forehead is the part on which shame visibly operates.

A man of confidence presseth forward upon every appearance of advantage; where his force is too feeble, he prevails by dint of impudence: these men of forehead are magnificent in promises, and infallible in their prescriptions. Collier.

I would fain know to what branch of the legislature they can have the forehead to apply. Swift.

FOREHO'LDING, fôre-hôld'îng. n. s. [fore and hold.] Predictions; ominous accounts; superstitious prognostications.

How are superstitious men hagged out of their wits with the fancy of omens, foreholdings, and old wives' tales! L'Estrange.

FO'REIGN, fôr'rîn adj. [forain, Fr. forano, Spanish; from foris, Lat.]

1. Not of this country; not domestick.

Your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home. Shaksp.

The learned correspondence you hold in foreign parts. Milton.

The positions are so far from being new, that they are commonly to be met with in both ancient and modern, domestick and foreign writers.
Atterbury.

The parties and divisions amongst us may several ways bring destruction upon our country, at the same time that our united force would secure us against all the attempts of a foreign enemy. Addis.

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation. It is often used with to; but more properly with from.

I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart. Addison.

Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition. Addison.

This design is not foreign from some people's thoughts. Swift.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.

They will not stick to say you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd him,
That he ran mad and died. Shakspeare.

4. [In law.] A foreign plea, placitum, forinsecum; as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.

5. Extraneous; adventitious in general.

There are who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mould in their ill-natur'd land
Induce. Philips.

FO'REIGNER, fôr'rîn-ûr. n. s. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native; a stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,
So mere a stranger to my thoughts, I know
Not how to entertain him. Denham.

To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong'd a friend, a kinsman, and a son. Dryd.

Water is the only native of England made use of in punch; but the lemons, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmegs, are all foreigners. Addison.

Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater lustre, either to foreigners or subjects. Swift.

FO'REIGNNESS, fôr'rîn-nês. n. s. [from foreign.] Remoteness; want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to set me right. Locke.

To FOREIMA'GINE, fôre-îm-mâdje'în. v. a. [fore and imagine.] To conceive or fancy before proof.

We are within compass of a foreimagined possibility in that behalf. Camden.

To FOREKNO'W, fôre-nô'. v. a. [fore and know.] To have prescience of; to foresee.

We foreknow that the sun will rise and set; that all men born in the world shall die again; that after winter the spring shall come; after the spring, summer and harvest; yet is not our foreknowledge the cause of any of those. Raleigh.

He foreknew John should not suffer a violent death, but go into his grave in peace. Brown.

Calchas the sacred seer, who had in view
Things present and the past, and things to come foreknew. Dryden.

Who would the miseries of man foreknow?
Not knowing, we but share our part of woe. Dryd.

FOREKNO'WABLE, fôre-nô'â-bl. adj. [from foreknow.] Possible to be known before they happen.

It is certainly foreknowable what they will do in such and such circumstances. More.

FOREKNO'WLEDGE, fôre-nôl'îdje. n. s. [fore and knowledge.] Prescience; knowledge of that which has not yet happened.

Our being in Christ by eternal foreknowledge, saveth us not without our actual and real adoption into the fellowship of his saints in this present world. Hooker.

I told him you was asleep: he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore chuses to speak with you. Shakspeare.

If I foreknew,
Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,
Which had no less prov'd certain unforeknown.
Milton.

I hope the foreknowledge you had of my esteem for you, is the reason you do not dislike my letters. Pope.

FO'RELAND, fôre'lând. n. s. [fore and land.] A promontory; headland; high land jutting into the sea; a cape.

As when a ship, by skilful steersman wrought
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind
Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sails. Milt.

To FO'RELAY, fôre-lâ'. v. a. [fore and lay.]

1. To lay wait for; to entrap by ambush.

A serpent shoots her sting at unaware;
An ambush'd thief forelays a traveller;
The man lies murder'd, while the thief and snake,
One gains the thickets, and one thrids the brake. Dryden.

2. To contrive antecedently.

To FO'RELIFT, fôre-lift'. v. a. [fore and lift.] To raise aloft any anteriour part.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast;
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joy of his new comen guest. Spenser.

FO'RELOCK, fôre'lôk. n. s. [fore and lock.] The hair that grows from the forepart of the head.

Tell her the joyous time will not be staid,
Unless she do him by the forelock take. Spenser.

Hyacinthine locks,
Round from his parted forelock manly hung,
Clust'ring, but not beneath his shoulders broad. Milton.

Zeal and duty are not slow,
But on occasion's forelock watchful wait. Milton.

Time is painted with a lock before, and bald behind, signifying thereby that we must take time by the forelock; for, when it is once past, there is no recalling it. Swift.

FO'REMAN, fôre'mân.[99] n. s. [fore and man.] The first or chief person.

He is a very sensible man, shoots flying, and has been several times foreman of the petty jury. Addison.

FOREME'NTIONED, fôre-mên'shûn'd. adj. [fore and mentioned.] Mentioned or recited before. It is observable that many participles are compounded with fore, whose verbs have no such composition.

Dacier, in the life of Aurelius, has not taken notice of the forementioned figure on the pillar. Addison.

FO'REMOST, fôre'môst. adj. [from fore.]

1. First in place.

All three were set among the foremost ranks of fame, for great minds to attempt, and great force to perform what they did attempt. Sidney.

Our women in the foremost ranks appear;
March to the fight, and meet your mistress there. Dryden.

The bold Sempronius,
That still broke foremost through the crowd of patriots,
As with a hurricane of zeal transported,
And virtuous even to madness! Addison.

2. First in dignity.

These ride foremost in the field,
As they the foremost rank of honour held. Dryden.

FORENA'MED, fôre'nâm'd. adj. [fore and name.] Nominated before.

As Curius and the forenamed Lentulus. Ben Jonson.

FO'RENOON, fôre'nôôn. n. s. [fore and noon.] The time of day reckoned from the middle point, between the dawn and the meridian, to the meridian: opposed to afternoon.

The manner was, that the forenoon they should run at tilt, the afternoon in a broad field in manner of a battle, 'till either the strangers or the country knights won the field. Sidney.

Curio, at the funeral of his father, built a temporary theatre, consisting of two parts, turning on hinges, according to the position of the sun, for the conveniency of forenoon's and afternoon's diversion. Arbuthnot.

FORENO'TICE, fôre-nô'tîs. n. s. [fore and notice.] Information of an event before it happens.

So strange a revolution never happens in poetry, but either heaven or earth gives some forenotice of it. Rymer.

FORE'NSICK, fô-rên'sîk. adj. [forensis, Latin.] Belonging to courts of judicature.

Person is a forensick term, appropriating actions and their merit; and so belongs only to intelligent agents, capable of a law, and happiness and misery. This personality extends itself beyond present existence to what is past, only by consciousness. Locke.

The forum was a publick place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before the proper judges in matters of property, or in criminal cases: thence all sorts of disputations in courts of justice, where several persons make their distinct speeches, may come under the name of forensick disputes. Watts.

To FOREORDA'IN, fôre-ôr-dâne'. v. a. [fore and ordain.] To predestinate; to predetermine; to preordain.

The church can discharge, in manner convenient, a work of so great importance, by foreordaining some short collect, wherein briefly to mention thanks. Hooker.

FO'REPART, fôre'pârt. n. s [fore and part.]

1. The part first in time.

Had it been so raised, it would deprive us of the sun's light all the forepart of the day. Raleigh.

2. The part anteriour in place.

The ribs have no cavity in them, and towards the forepart or breast are broad and thin, to bend and give way without danger of fracture. Ray.

FOREPA'ST, fôre-pâst'. adj. [fore and past.] Past before a certain time.

Now cease, ye damsels, your delights forepast:
Enough it is that all the day is your's. Spenser.

My forepast proofs, howe'er the matter fall,
Shall tax my fears with little vanity,
Having vainly fear'd too little. Shakspeare.

Such is the treaty which he negociates with us, an offer and tender of a reconciliation, an act of oblivion, of all forepast sins, and of a new covenant. Hammond.

FOREPOSSE'SSED, fôre-pôz-zêst'. adj. [fore and possess.] Preoccupied; prepossessed; pre-engaged.

The testimony either of the ancient fathers or of other classical divines, may be clearly and abundantly answered, to the satisfaction of any rational man, not extremely forepossessed with prejudice. Sanderson.

FO'RERANK, fôre'rângk. n. s. [fore and rank.] First rank; front.

Yet leave our cousin Catherine here with us:
She is our capital demand, compris'd
Within the forerank of our articles. Shakspeare.

FORERECI'TED, fôre-rê-si'têd. adj. [fore and recite.] Mentioned or enumerated before.

Bid him recount
The forerecited practices, whereof
We cannot feel too little, hear too much. Shaksp.

To FORERU'N, fôre-rûn'. v. a. [fore and run.]

1. To come before as an earnest of something following; to introduce as a harbinger.

Against ill chances men are ever merry;
But heaviness foreruns the good event. Shaksp.

The sun
Was set, and twilight from the east came on Forerunning night. Milton.

She bids me hope; oh heav'ns, she pities me!
And pity still foreruns approaching love,
As lightning does the thunder. Dryden.

2. To precede; to have the start of.

I heard it to be a maxim at Dublin to follow, if not forerun, all that is or will be practised in London. Graunt.

FORERU'NNER, fôre-rûn'nûr. n. s. [from forerun.]

1. A harbinger; a messenger sent before to give notice of the approach of those that follow.

The six strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a forerunner come from a seventh, the prince of Morocco. Shakspeare.

A cock was sacrificed as the forerunner of day and the sun, thereby acknowledging the light of life to be derived from the divine bounty, the daughter of Providence. Stillingfleet.

My elder brothers my forerunners came,
Rough draughts of nature, ill design'd, and lame:
Blown off, like blossoms, never made to bear;
'Till I came finished, her last labour'd care. Dryd.

2. A prognostick; a sign foreshowing any thing.

O Eve! some further change awaits us nigh,
Which heav'n, by these mute signs in nature shews
Forerunners of his purpose. Milton.

Loss of sight is the misery of life, and usually the forerunner of death. South.

The keeping insensible perspiration up in due measure is the cause as well as sign of health, and the least deviation from that due quantity, the certain forerunner of a disease. Arbuthnot.

Already Opera prepares the way,
The sure forerunner of her gentle sway. Pope.

To FORESA'Y, fôre-sâ'. v. a. [fore and say.] To predict; to prophesy; to foretell.

1. To see beforehand; to see what has not yet happened; to have prescience; to foreknow.

The first of them could things to come foresee;
The next could of things present best advise;
The third, things past, could keep in memory. Fairy Queen.

If there be any thing foreseen that is not usual, be armed for it by any hearty, though a short prayer, and an earnest resolution beforehand, and then watch when it comes. Taylor.

At his foreseen approach, already quake
The Caspian kingdoms and Meotian lake;
Their seers behold the tempest from afar,
And threat'ning oracles denounce the war. Dryden.

2. To provide for; with to. Out of use.

A king against a storm must foresee to a convenient stock of treasure. Bacon.

To FORESHA'ME, fôre-shâme'. v. a. [fore and shame.] To shame; to bring reproach upon.

Whose purple blush the day foreshows. Denham.

You chose to withdraw yourself from publick business, when the face of heaven grew troubled, and the frequent shifting of the wind foreshowed a storm. Dryden.

2. To represent before it comes.

What else is the law but the gospel foreshowed? What other the gospel than the law fulfilled? Hooker.

FO'RESIGHT, fôre'site. n. s. [fore and sight.]

1. Prescience; prognostication; foreknowledge. The accent anciently on the last syllable.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to foresight wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st, whilst she to life was form'd. Milton.

2. Provident care of futurity.

He had a sharp foresight, and working wit,
That never idle was, ne once could rest a whit. Spenser.

In matters of arms he was both skilful and industrious, and as well in foresight as resolution, present and great. Hayward.

Difficulties and temptations will more easily be born or avoided, if with prudent foresight we arm ourselves against them. Rogers.

FORESI'GHTFUL, fôre-site'fûl. adj. [foresight and full.] Prescient; provident.

Death gave him no such pangs as the foresightful care he had of his silly successor. Sidney.

To FORESI'GNIFY, fôre-sig'nê-fi. v. a. [fore and signify.] To betoken beforehand; to foreshow; to typify.

Discoveries of Christ already present, whose future coming the Psalms did but foresignify. Hooker.

Yet as being past times noxious, where they light
On man, beast, plant, wasteful and turbulent
They oft foresignify, and threaten ill. Milton.

FO'RESKIN, fôre'skin. n. s. [fore and skin.] The prepuce.

Thy own hand
An hundred of the faithless foe shall slay,
And for a dow'r their hundred foreskins pay,
Be Michol thy reward. Cowley.

FO'RESKIRT, fôre'skêrt. n. s. [fore and skirt.] The pendulous or loose part of the coat before.

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect!
No other obligation?
That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his foreskirt. Shakspeare.

To FORESLA'CK, fôre-slâk'. v. a. [fore and slack.] To neglect by idleness.

It is a great pity that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happy an occasion forslacked, that might have been the eternal good of the land. Spenser.

To FORESLO'W, fôre-slô'. v. a. [fore and slow.]

1. To delay; to hinder; to impede; to obstruct.

No stream, no wood, no mountain could foreslow
Their hasty pace. Fairfax.

Now the illustrious nymph return'd again,
Brings every grace triumphant in her train:
The wond'ring Nereids, though they rais'd no storm,
Foreslow'd her passage to behold her form. Dryden.

2. To neglect; to omit.

When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foreslowing, but wisdom in chusing his time, resolved with speed to assail them. Bacon.

Our good purposes foreslowed are become our tormentors upon our death-bed. Bishop Hall.

Chremes, how many fishers do you know
That rule their boats and use their nets aright,
That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foreslow?
Some such have been: but ah! by tempests spite
Their boats are lost; while we may sit and moan
That few were such, and now these few are none. P. Fletcher.

To FORESLO'W, fôre-slô'. v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.

This may plant courage in their quailing breasts,
For yet is hope of life and victory:
Foreslow no longer, make me hence amain. Shak.

To FORESPE'AK, fôre-spêke'. v. n. [fore and speak.]

1. To predict; to foresay; to foreshow; to foretell.

Old Godfrey of Winchester thinketh no ominous forespeaking to lie in names. Camden.

2. To forbid. [from for and speak.]

Thou hast forespoke my being in these wars,
And sayst it is not fit. Shaksp.

FORESPE'NT, fôre-spênt'. adj. [for and spent.]

1. Wasted; tired; spent.

After him came spurring hard
A gentleman, almost forespent with speed. Shaksp.

2. Forepassed; past. [fore and spent.]

Is not enough thy evil life forespent? F. Queen.

You shall find his vanities forespent,
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus,
Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shaksp.

3. Bestowed before.

We must receive him
According to the honour of his sender;
And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,
We must extend our notice. Shaksp.

FORESPU'RRER, fôre-spûr'ûr. n. s. [fore and spur.] One that rides before.

A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly summer was at hand,
As this forespurrer comes before his lord. Shaksp.

FO'REST, fôr'rêst. n. s. [forest, French; foresta, Italian.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground interspersed with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot chuse but feed in continual danger of life. Hooker.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until
Great Birnham-wood to Dunsinane's high hill
Shall come against him.
——That will never be:
Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shaksp.

There be airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champaigns, but grasing, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber shades, as in forests. Bacon.

How the first forest rais'd its shady head. Roscommon.

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king for his pleasure.

The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, directed to certain persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to afforest: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made, that none shall hunt any wild beasts within that precinct, without licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agistors, regarders, bailiffs, and beedles. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pyepowders to a fair. Cowell.

To FORESTA'LL, fôre-stâwl'.[406] v. a. [foreealian, Sax.]

1. To anticipate; to take beforehand.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,
And give men turns of speech; do not forestall
By lavishness thine own and others' wit,
As if thou mad'st thy will. Herbert.

What need a man forestall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid? Milton.

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.

And though good luck prolonged hath thy date,
Yet death then would the like mishap forestall. Fairy Queen.

What's in prayer, but this twofold force
To be forestalled ere we come to fall,
Or pardon being down. Shaksp.

But for my tears,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke. Shaksp.

If thou covet death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be forestall'd. Milton.

I will not forestall your judgment of the rest. Pope.

3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price.

He bold spake, sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place at erst,
For fear of further harm, I counsel thee. F. Queen.

4. To deprive by something prior: with of. Not in use.

May
This night forestall him of the coming day. Shaksp.

FORESTA'LLER, fôre-stâwl'ûr. n. s. [from forestall.] One that anticipates the market; one that purchases before others to raise the price.

Commodities, good or bad, the workmen must take at his master's rate, or sit still and starve, whilst, by this means, this new sort of engrossers or forestallers having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen, set the price upon the poor landholder. Locke.

FORESTBO'RN, fôr'rêst-bôrn. adj. [forest and born.] Born in a wild.

This boy is forestborn,
And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments
Of desperate studies. Shaksp.

FO'RESTER, fôr'rês-tûr. n. s. [forestier, French; from forest.]

1. An officer of the forest.

Forester, my friend, where is the bush,
That we may stand and play the murtherer in?
—Here by, upon the edge of yonder coppice.
Shaksp.

2. An inhabitant of the wild country.

FO'RESWAT, FO'RESWART, fôre'swôt. adj. [from for and swat, from sweat.] Spent with heat.

Miso and Mopsa, like a couple of foreswat melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments. Sidney.

To FORETA'STE, fôre-tâste'. v. a. [fore and taste.]

1. To have antepast of; to have prescience of.

2. To taste before another.

Perhaps the fact
Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit,
Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first
Made common and unhallow'd, ere our taste. Milt.

FO'RETASTE, fôre'tâste. n. s. Anticipation of.

A pleasure that a man may call as properly his own as his soul and his conscience, neither liable to accident, nor exposed to injury; it is the foretaste of heaven, and the earnest of eternity. South.

To FORETE'LL, fôre-têl'. v. a. preter. and part. pass. foretold. [fore and tell.]

1. To predict; to prophesy.

What art thou, whose heavy looks foretell
Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue? Shak.
I found
The new created world, which fame in heaven
Long had foretold. Milton.
Mercia's king,
Warn'd in a dream, his murder did foretell,
From point to point, as after it befell. Dryden.
When great Ulysses sought the Phrygian shores,
Deeds then undone my faithful tongue foretold;
Heav'n seal'd my words, and you those deeds behold. Pope.

2. To foretoken; to foreshow.

To FORETE'LL, fôre-têl'. v. n. To utter prophecy.

All the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, have likewise foretold of these days. Acts.

FORETE'LLER, fôre-têl'lûr. n. s. [from foretell.] Predicter; foreshower.

Others are proposed, not that the foretold events should be known; but that the accomplishment that expounds them may evince, that the foreteller of them was able to foresee thee. Boyle.

To FORETHI'NK, fôre-*th*ink'. v. a. [fore and think.]

1. To anticipate in the mind; to have prescience of.

The soul of every man
Prophetically does forethink thy fall. Shaksp.
I do pray to thee,
Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom,
Forethought by heav'n. Shaksp.
Adam could not be ignorant of the punishments due to neglect and disobedience; and felt, by the proof thereof, in himself another terror than he had forethought, or could imagine. Raleigh.
Friday, the fatal day! when next it came,
Her soul forethought the fiend would change his game. Dryden.

2. To contrive antecedently.

Blessed be that God which hath given you an heart to forethink this, and a will to honour him with his own. Bishop Hall.

To FORETHI'NK, fôre-*th*ink'. v. n. To contrive beforehand

What's my frenzy will be call'd my crime:
What then is thine? Thou cool deliberate villain!
Thou wise, forethinking, weighing politician! Smith.

FORETHO'UGHT, fôre'*th*âwt'. n. s. [from forethink.]

1. Prescience; anticipation.

He that is undone, is equally undone, whether it be by spitefulness of forethought, or by the folly of oversight, or evil counsel. L'Estrange.

2. Provident care.

To FORETO'KEN, fôre-tô'k'n. v. a. [fore and token.] To foreshow; to prognosticate as a sign.

The king from Ireland hastes; but did no good:
Whilst strange prodigious signs foretoken blood.
Daniel.

FORETO'KEN, fôre-tô'k'n. n. s. [from the verb.] Prevenient sign; prognostick.

It may prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune. Sidney.
They misliked nothing more in king Edward the confessor, than that he was Frenchified, and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in of foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden.

FORETOO'TH, fôre'tôô*th*. n. s. [fore and tooth.] The tooth in the anteriour part of the mouth; the incisor.

The foreteeth should be formed broad, and with a thin sharp edge like chizzles. Ray.

FO'RETOP, fôre'tôp. n. s. [fore and top.] That part of a woman's headdress that is forward, or the top of a periwig.

So may your hats your foretops never press,
Untouch'd your ribbons, sacred be your dress.
Dryden.

FOREVO'UCHED, fôre-vôûtsh'êd.[359] part. [fore and vouch.] Affirmed before; formerly told.

Sure her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it; or your forevouch'd affection
Fall'n into taint. Shaksp.

FO'REWARD, fôre'wârd. n. s. [fore and ward.] The van; the front.

They that marched in the foreward were all mighty men. 1 Maccabees.

To FOREWA'RN, fôre-wârn'. v. a. [fore and warn.]

1. To admonish beforehand.

I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: fear him which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell. Luke.

2. To inform previously of any future event.

Divine interpreter, by favour sent
Down from the empyrean, to forewarn
Us timely of what might else have been our loss
Unknown. Milton.

3. To caution against any thing beforehand.

Well I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd.
Shaksp.
Thy pride,
And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,
Rejected my forewarning, and disdain'd
Not to be trusted. Milton.
Though Phœbus had forewarned him of singing wars, yet the search of nature was free. Dryden.
Young Chorœbus who by love was led,
To win renown and fair Cassandra's bed,
Had lately brought his troops to Priam's aid,
Forewarned in vain by the prophetick maid. Dryd.

To FOREWA'STE, fôre-wâste'. v. n. [fore and waste.] To desolate; to destroy. Out of use.

Vespasian, with great spoil and rage,
Forewasted all, until Genuissa gent
Persuaded him to cease. Fairy Queen.
High time 'gan it wex for Una fair,
To think of those her captive parents dear,
And their forewasted kingdom to repair. F. Queen.

To FOREWEA'RY, fôre-wê'rê. v. a. [for and weary.] To dispirit with labour.

By your toil
And labour long, through which he hither came,
Ye both forewearied be: therefore a while
I read you rest, and to your bowers recoil. F. Queen.

To FOREWI'SH, fôre-wish'. v. a. [fore and wish.] To desire beforehand.

The wiser sort ceased not to what in them lay, to procure that the good commonly forewished might in time come to effect. Knolles.

FOREWO'RN, fôre-wôrn'. part. [fore and worn, from wear.] Worn out; wasted by time or use.

Neither the light was enough to read the words, and the ink was already foreworn, and in many places blotted. Sidney.

FO'RFEIT, fôr'fît.[266] n. s. [forfait, Fr. fforfed, Welsh.]

1. Something lost by the commission of a crime; something paid for expiation of a crime; a fine; a mulct

Thy slanders I forgive, and therewithal
Remit thy other forfeits. Shaksp.
Th' execution leave to high disposal,
And let another hand, not thine, exact
Thy penal forfeit from thyself. Milton.
Thy life, Melantius! I am come to take,
Of which foul treason does a forfeit make. Waller.

2. A person obnoxious to punishment; one whose life is forfeited by his offence. Now obsolete.

Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words. Shaksp.
Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo, who hath sentenced him. Shaksp.

To FO'RFEIT, fôr'fît. v. a. [from the noun.] To lose by some breach of condition; to lose by some offence.

If then a man, on light conditions, gain
A great estate to him, and his, for ever;
If wilfully he forfeit it again,
Who doth bemoan his heir, or blame the giver?
Davies.
Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness. Boyle.
A father cannot alien the power he has over his child; he may perhaps to some degrees forfeit it, but cannot transfer it. Locke.

FO'RFEIT, fôr'fît. participial adj. [from the verb.] Liable to penal seizure; alienated by a crime; lost either as to the right or possession, by breach of conditions.

All the souls that are, were forfeit once;
And he that might the 'vantage best have took
Found out the remedy. Shaksp.
Beg that thou may'st have leave to hang thyself;
And yet thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
Thou hast not left the value of a cord. Shaksp.
This now fenceless world,
Forfeit to death. Milton.
Straight all his hopes exhal'd in empty smoke,
And his long toils were forfeit for a look. Dryden.
Methought with wond'rous ease he swallow'd down
His forfeit honour, to betray the town. Dryden.
Now the murd'rer paid his forfeit breath;
What lands so distant from that scene of death,
But trembling heard the same! Pope.

FO'RFEITABLE, fôr'fît-â-bl. adj. [from forfeit.] Possessed on conditions, by the breach of which any thing may be lost.

FO'RFEITURE, fôr'fît-yûre. n. s. [forfaiture, Fr. from forfeit.]

1. The act of forfeiting; the punishment discharged by loss of something possessed.
2. The thing forfeited; a mulct; a fine.

The court is as well a Chancery to save and debar forfeitures, as a court of common law to decide rights; and there would be work enough in Germany and Italy, if imperial forfeitures should go for good titles. Bacon.

Ancient privileges and acts of grace indulged by former kings, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors; nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously. Taylor.

He fairly abdicates his throne,
He has a forfeiture incurr'd. Swift.

FORGA'VE, fôr-gâve'. The preterit of forgive.

FORGE, fôrje. n. s. [forge, Fr.]

1. The place where iron is beaten into form. In common language we use forge for large work, and smithy for small; but in books the distinction is not kept.

Now behold,
In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens. Shaksp.

In other part stood one, who at the forge
Labouring, two massy clods of iron and brass
Had melted. Milton.

Th' o'er labour'd Cyclop from his task retires,
Th' Æolian forge exhausted of its fires. Pope.

2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped.

From no other forge hath proceeded a strange conceit, that to serve God with any set form of common prayer is superstitious. Hooker.

3. Manufacture of metalline bodies; the act of working.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious and obedient to the stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, and moulded. Bacon.

To FORGE, fôrje. v. a. [forger, old Fr.]

1. To form by the hammer; to beat into shape.

The queen of martials,
And Mars himself conducted them; both which being forg'd of gold,
Must needs have golden furniture. Chapman.

Tyger with tyger, bear with bear you'll find,
In leagues offensive and defensive join'd;
But lawless man the anvil dares profane,
And forge that steel by which a man is slain,
Which earth at first for plough-shares did afford,
Nor yet the smith had learn'd to form a sword.
Tate's Juvenal.

2. To make by any means.

He was a kind of nothing, titeless,
'Till he had forg'd himself a name i' th' fire
Of burning Rome. Shaksp.

His heart 's his mouth;
What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent.
Shaksp.

Those names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of scholars, could never get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation. Locke.

3. To counterfeit; to falsify.

Were I a king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
For my more having would be but a sauce
To make me hunger more; that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth. Shaksp.

FO'RGER, fôrje'jûr. n. s. [from forge.]

1. One who makes or forms.
2. One who counterfeits any thing; a falsifier.

As in stealing, if there were no receivers there would be no thieves; so in slander, if there were fewer spreaders there would be fewer forgers of libels. Government of the Tongue.

No forger of lies willingly and wittingly furnishes out the means of his own detection. West.

FO'RGERY, fôre'jûr-ê. n. s. [from forge.]

The crime of falsification.

Has your king married the lady Gray?
And now, to sooth your forgery and his,
Sends me a paper to persuade me patience. Shak.

Nothing could have been easier than for the Jews, the enemies of Jesus Christ, to have disproved these facts had they been false, to have shewn their falsehood, and to have convicted them of forgery. Stephens.

A forgery, in setting a false name to a writing, which may prejudice another's fortune, the law punishes with the loss of ears; but has inflicted no adequate penalty for doing the same thing in print, though books sold under a false name are so many forgeries. Swift

2. Smith's work; fabrication; the act of the forge.

He ran on embattled armies clad in iron,
And weaponless himself,
Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery
Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail

To FORGE'T, fôr-gêt'. v. a. preter. forgot; part. forgotten or forgot. [ꝑoꝛȝ̌an, Sax. vergeten, Dut.]

1. To lose memory of; to let go from the remembrance.

That is not forgot
Which ne'er I did remember to my knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him. Shaksp.

When I am forgotten, as I shall be,
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me must more be heard. Shaksp.

Forget not thy friend in thy mind, and be not unmindful of him in thy riches Ecclus.

No sooner was our deliverance completed, but we forgot our danger and our duty. Atterbury.

Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot. Pope.

2. Not to attend; to neglect.

Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yea, they may forget; yet will I not forget thee. Isaiah.

If we might forget ourselves, or forget God; if we might disregard our reason, and live by humour and fancy in any thing, or at any time, or at any place, it would be as lawful to do the same in every thing, at every time, and every place. Law.

The mass of mean forgotten things. Anon.

FORGE'TFUL, fôr-gêt'fûl. adj. [from forget.]

1. Not retaining the memory of.
2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.

But when a thousand rolling years are past,
So long their punishments and penance last,
Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethean flood,
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours, and their irksome years.
Dryden.

3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful; careless.

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers. Hebrews.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence. Shaksp.

Have you not love enough to bear with me,
When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,
Makes me forgetful. Shaksp.

I, in fact, a real interest have,
Which to my own advantage I would save,
And, with the usual courtier's trick, intend
To serve myself, forgetful of my friend. Prior.

FORGE'TFULNESS, fôr-gêt'fûl-nês. n. s. [from forgetful.]

1. Oblivion; cessation to remember; loss of memory.

O gentle sleep!
Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness? Shaksp.

All birds and beasts lie hush'd; sleep steals away
The wild desires of men and toils of day;
And brings, descending through the silent air,
A sweet forgetfulness of human care. Pope.

2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.

The church of England is grievously charged with forgetfulness of her duty. Hooker.

FO'RGETIVE, fôrje'ê-tîv. adj. [from forge.]

That may forge or produce. A word, I believe, peculiar to Shakspeare.

Good sherrie sack ascends me into the brain, dries me there all the foolish, dull vapours, makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble shapes, which, delivered to the voice, become excellent wit. Shaksp.

FORGE'TTER, fôr-gêt'tûr. n. s. [from forget.]

1. One that forgets.
2. A careless person.

To FORGI'VE, fôr-gîv'.[157] v. a. pret. forgave; part. pass. forgiven. [ꝑoꝛȝ̌ıꝑan, Saxon.]

1. To pardon a person; not to punish

Then heaven forgive him too! Shaksp.

I do beseech your grace for charity;
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.
—Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,
As I would be forgiven: I forgive all. Shaksp.

Slowly provok'd, she easily forgives. Prior.

2. To pardon a crime.

The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity. Isaiah.

If prayers
Could alter high decrees, I to that place
Would speed before thee, and be louder heard,
That on my head all might be visited,
Thy frailty and infirmer sex forgiven,
To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milton.

3. To remit; not to exact debt or penalty.

The lord of that servant was moved with compassion, loosed him, and forgave him the debt. Matthew.

FORGI'VENESS, fôr-gîv'nês. n. s. [ꝑoꝛȝıꝑennıꝛꝛe, Saxon.]

1. The act of forgiving.

To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses. Daniel.

2. Pardon of an offender.

Thou hast promised repentance and forgiveness to them that have sinned against thee. Prayer of Manasses.

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet;
Mine and my father's death come not upon thee,
Nor thine on me. Shaksp.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;
But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong.
Dryden.

3. Pardon of an offence.

God has certainly promised forgiveness of sin to every one who repents. South.

4. Tenderness; willingness to pardon.

Here are introduced more heroick principles of meekness, forgiveness, bounty and magnanimity, than all the learning of the heathens could invent. Sprat.

Mercy above did hourly plead
For her resemblance here below;
And mild forgiveness intercede
To stop the coming blow. Dryden.

5. Remission of a fine, penalty, or debt.

This song shall not be forgotten. Deut.
Great Stafford! worthy of that name, though all
Of thee could be forgotten, but thy fall. Denham.
The soft ideas of the chearful note,
Lightly receiv'd, were easily forgot. Prior.

To FORHA'IL, fôr-hâle'. v. a. [An old word. Probably for forhaul, from for and haul.] To harass, tear, torment.

All this long tale
Nought easeth the care that doth me forhail. Spenser.

FORK, fôrk. n. s. [furca, Latin; fforch, Welsh; fourche, French.]

1. An instrument divided at the end into two or more points or prongs, used on many occasions.

At midsummer down with the brambles and brakes,
And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes. Tusser.
The vicar first, and after him the crew,
With forks and staves the felon to pursue,
Ran Coll our dog. Dryden.
I dine with forks that have but two prongs. Swift.

2. It is sometimes used for the point of an arrow.

The bow is bent and drawn: make from the shaft.
—Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart. Shaksp.

3. A point.

Several are amazed at the wisdom of the ancients that represented a thunderbolt with three forks, since nothing could have better explained its triple quality of piercing, burning, and melting. Addison.

To FORK, fôrk. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into blades, as corn does out of the ground.

The corn beginneth to fork. Mortimer.

FO'RKED, fôr'kêd.[366] adj. [from fork.] Opening into two or more parts.

Naked he was, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife. Shaksp.
Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory. Shaksp.
Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me the poor dappled fools
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches goar'd. Shaksp.
He would have spoke;
But hiss for hiss return'd, with forked tongue
To forked tongue. Milton.
Ye dragons, whose contagious breath
Peoples the dark retreats of death,
Change your fierce hissing into joyful song,
And praise your Maker with your forked tongue. Roscommon.

FO'RKEDLY, fôr'kêd-lè. adv. [from forked.] In a forked form.

FO'RKEDNESS, fôr'kêd-nês. n. s. [from forked.] The quality of opening into two parts or more.

FO'RKHEAD, fôrk'hêd. n. s. [fork and head.] Point of an arrow.

It seizing, no way enter might;
But back rebounding, left the forkhead keen,
Eftsoons it fled away, and might no where be seen. Fairy Queen.

FO'RKY, fôr'kè. adj. [from fork.] Forked; furcated; opening into two parts.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake;
Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
And with their forky tongue and pointless sting shall play. Pope.

FORLO'RE, fôr-lôre'. [The preterit and participle of the Saxon ꝑoꝛleoꝛan, in Dutch verloren.] Deserted; forsook; forsaken. Obsolete.

Such as Diana by the sandy shore
Of swift Eurotas, or on Cynthus' green,
Where all the nymphs have her forlore. F. Queen.
That wretched world he 'gan for to abhor,
And mortal life 'gan loath, as thing forlore. Fairy Queen.
Thus fell the trees, with noise the deserts roar;
The beasts their caves, the birds their nests forlore. Fairfax.

FORLO'RN, fôr-lôrn'. adj. [ꝑoꝛleoꝛan, from ꝑoꝛleoꝛan, Sax. verloren, Dut.]

1. Deserted; destitute; forsaken; wretched; helpless; solitary.

Make them seek for that they wont to scorn;
Of fortune and of hope at once forlorn. Hubberd.
Tell me, good Hobinol, what gars thee greet?
What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs ytorn?
Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lass forlorn? Spenser.
In every place was heard the lamentation of women and children; every thing shewed the heaviness of the time, and seemed as altogether lost and forlorn. Knolles.
How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,
To live again in these wild woods forlorn. Milton.
Their way
Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear wood,
The nodding horrour of whose shady brows,
Threats the forlorn and wand'ring passenger. Milton.
My only strength and stay! forlorn of thee,
Whither shall I betake me, where subsist! Milton.
Like a declining statesman, left forlorn
To his friends' pity and pursuers' scorn. Denham.
The good old man, forlorn of human aid,
For vengeance to his heav'nly patron pray'd. Dryden
Philomel laments forlorn. Fenton.
As some sad turtle his lost love deplores,
Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn;
Alike unheard, unpity'd, and forlorn. Pope.

2. Taken away. This sense shows that it is the participle of an active verb, now lost.

When as night hath us of light forlorn,
I wish that day would shortly reascend. Spenser.
What is become of great Acrates' son!
Or where hath he hung up his mortal blade,
That hath so many haughty conquests won?
Is all his force forlorn, and all his glory done? Fairy Queen.

3. Small; despicable: in a ludicrous sense.

He was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invisible. Shaksp.

FORLO'RN, fôr-lôrn'. n. s.

And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn. Shaksp.

2. FORLO'RN Hope. The soldiers who are sent first to the attack, and are therefore doomed to perish.

Criticks in plume,
Who lolling on our foremost benches sit,
And still charge first, the true forlorn of wit. Dryd.

FORLO'RNNESS, fôr-lôrn'nês. n. s. [from forlorn.] Destitution; misery; solitude

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness; even whilst they compleated the forlornness of their condition by the lethargy of not being sensible of it. Boyle.

To FORLI'E, fôr-li'. v. n. [from fore and lie.] To lie before.

Knit with a golden baldric, which forlay
Athwart her snowy breast, and did divide
Her dainty paps, which, like young fruit in May,
Now little 'gan to swell; and being ty'd,
Through her thin weed, their places only signify'd. Fairy Queen.

FORM, fôrm or fôrm. n. s. [forma, Lat. forme, French.]

1. The external appearance of any thing; representation; shape.

Nay, women are frail too.
——Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
Which are as easy broke as they make forms. Shak.
It stood still; but I could not discern the form thereof. Job.
Gold will endure a vehement fire, without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form. Grew.
Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grist. Swift.

2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.

When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. Shaksp.
Here toils and death, and death's half-brother, sleep,
Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep;
With anxious pleasures of a guilty mind,
Deep frauds before, and open force behind. Dryd.

3. Particular model or modification.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to those forms. Locke.
It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Addison.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance.

He hath no form nor comeliness. Isaiah.

5. Regularity; method; order.

What he spoke, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. Shaksp.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.

Then those whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.
They were young heirs sent only for forms from schools, where they were not suffered to stay three months. Swift.

7. Ceremony; external rites.

Though well we may not pass upon his life,
Without the form of justice; yet our pow'r
Shall do a court'sy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shaksp.
A long table, and a square table, or a seat about the walls, seem things of form, but are things of substance: for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the counsellors' opinions that sit lower. Bacon.
That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he caused a particular act to pass, that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes. Davies.
Their general used, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their forms. Clarendon.
How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?
Is it a compliment of form, or love? A. Philips.

8. Stated method; established practice; ritual and prescribed mode.

He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of polity and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all. Hooker.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

Nor seek to know
Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden.

9. A long seat.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back. Watts.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park. Shaksp.

10. A class; a rank of students.

It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form. Dryden.

11. The seat or bed of a hare.

Now for a clod like hare in form thy peer;
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move;
Now the ambitious lark, with mirrour clear;
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Sidney.

Have you observ'd a sitting hare,
List'ning, and fearful of the storm
Of horns and hounds, clap back her ear,
Afraid to keep or leave her form? Prior.

12. Form is the essential, specifical, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris.

In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of sacraments, we find grace expresly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form doth adjoin itself. Hooker.

13. A formal cause; that which gives essence.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe. Bacon.

To Form, fôrm. v. a. [formo, Lat.]

1. To make out of materials.

God formed man of the dust of the ground. Genesis.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought
Fusil, or grav'n in metal. Milton.

Determin'd to advance into our room
A creature form'd of earth. Milton.

She form'd the phantom of well-bodied air. Pope.

2. To model to a particular shape or state.

Creature in whom excell'd
Whatever can to sight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet. Milton.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to foresight wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st while she to life was form'd. Milton.

3. To modify; to scheme; to plan.

Lucretius taught him not to form his heroe, to give him piety or valour for his manners. Dryden.

4. To arrange; to combine in any particular manner: as, he formed his troops.

5. To adjust; to settle.

Our differences with the Romanists are thus formed into an interest, and become the design not of single persons, but of corporations and successions. Decay of Piety.

6. To contrive; to coin.

The defeat of the design is the routing of opinions formed for promoting it. Decay of Piety.

He dies too soon;
And fate, if possible, must be delay'd:
The thought that labours in my forming brain,
Yet crude and immature, demands more time. Rowe.

7. To model by education or institution.

Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
And seem to labour when he labours not:
Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind,
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind. Dryd.

FO'RMAL, fôr'mâl.[ss] adj. [formal, Fr. formalis, Latin.]

1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectation.

The justice,
In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shaksp.

Formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance surely like a father. Shak.

Ceremonies be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish the credit of him that speaks. Bacon.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.

There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in custom it cometh to pass, but may be taken away, if occasion serve. Hooker.

As there are formal and written leagues, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemies of human society, so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pirates. Bacon.

3. Regular; methodical.

The formal stars do travel so,
As we their names and courses know;
And he that on their changes looks,
Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.

Of formal duty make no more thy boast;
Thou disobey'st where it concerns me most. Dryd.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope.

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constituent; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice: the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated. Holder.

Bellarmine agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superiour; but withal he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stillingfleet.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God. Bentley.

7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristick; regular; proper.

Thou should'st come like a fury cover'd with snakes,
Not like a formal man. Shakspeare.

I will not let him stir,
'Till I have us'd th' approved means I have;
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again. Shaksp.

Fo'rmalist, fôr'mâl-ist. n. s. [formaliste, Fr. from form.] One who practises external ceremony; one who prefers appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satyr to persons of judgment, to see what shifts formalists have, and what prospectives to make superficies to seem a body that hath depth and bulk. Bacon.

A grave, staunch, skilfully managed face, set upon a grasping aspiring mind, having got many a sly formalist the reputation of a primitive and severe piety. South.

Forma'lity, fôr-mâl'é-tè. n. s. [formalité, French; from form.]

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.

The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary. Hooker.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs. King Charles.

Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners. L'Estrange.

Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom, but of conscience. Atterbury.

2. Solemn order, method, mode, habit, or dress.

If men forswear the deeds and bonds they draw,
Though sign'd with all formality of law;
And though the signing and the seal proclaim
The barefac'd perjury, and fix the shame. Dryden.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all sat down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators. Swift.

3. External appearance.

To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the imposture of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Glanville.

4. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.

May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give an hundred pounds to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God. Stillingfleet.

To Fo'rmalize, fôr'mâ-lize. v. a. [formaliser, Fr. from formal. A word not now in use.]

1. To model; to modify.

The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalize, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were so many limbs compacted into one body. Hooker.

2. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony.

Fo'rmally, fôr'mâl-lè. adv. [from formal.]

1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies, or rites.

Formally, according to our law,
Depose him. Shakspeare.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.

To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage. Collier.

3. In open appearance; in a visible and apparent state.

You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorised guides of the church, and the rest of the people. Hooker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.

This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it. South.

The heathens and the christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a christian grace, is the spring from which it flows. Smalridge.

FORMA'TION, fôr-mâ'shûn. n. s. [formation, Fr. from formo, Lat.]

1. The act of forming or generating.

The matter discharged forth of volcanoes, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors. Woodward.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fœtus. Arbuthnot.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, gives not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them. Watts.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth tear asunder. Brown.

FO'RMATIVE, fôr'mâ-tiv.[157] adj. [from formo, Lat.] Having the power of giving form; plastick.

As we have established our assertion of the seminal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meanest plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil. Bentley.

FO'RMER, fôr'mûr.[166] n. s. [from form.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses. Ray.

FO'RMER, fôr'mûr.[98] adj. [from ꝑopma, Sax. first; whence former, and formost, now commonly written foremost, as if derived from before. Foremost is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which we saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place.]

1. Before another in time.

Thy air,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first:
—A third is like the former. Shakspeare.

2. Mentioned before another.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critick: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgment; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope.

3. Past: as, this was the custom in former times.

The present point of time is all thou hast,
The future doubtful, and the former past. Harte.

FO'RMERLY, fôr'mûr-lè. adv. [from former.] In times past.

The places were all of them formerly the cool retirements of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their summer. Addison.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal salts, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature Arbuthnot.

FO'RMIDABLE, fôr'mè-dâ-bl. adj. [formidabilis, Lat. formidable, Fr.] Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrifick; to be feared.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages behind Dryden.

They seem'd to fear the formidable sight,
And roll'd their billows on, to speed his flight. Dryden.

FO'RMIDABLENESS, fôr'mè-dâ-bl-nês. n. s. [from formidable.]

1. The quality of exciting terrour or dread.

2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chuse to be shewed the formidableness of their danger, than by a blind embracing it, to perish. Decay of Piety.

FO'RMIDABLY, fôr'mè-dâ-blè. adv. [from formidable.] In a terrible manner.

Behold! e'en to remoter shores,
A conquering navy proudly spread;
The British cannon formidably roars. Dryden.

FO'RMLESS, fôrm'lês. adj. [from form.] Shapeless; wanting regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love. Shaksp.

FO'RMULARY, fôr'mû-lâr-è. n. s. [formulaire, Fr from formule.] A book containing stated and prescribed models or set forms.

FO'RMULARY, fôr'mû-lâr-è. adj. Ritual; prescribed; stated.

FO'RMULE, fôr'mûle. n s. [formule, Fr. formula, Lat.] A set or prescribed model.

To FO'RNICATE, fôr'nè-kâte. v. a. [from fornix, Lat.] To commit lewdness.

FO'RNICATION, fôr-nè-kâ'shûn. n. s. [fornication, Fr. fornicatio, Lat.]

1. Concubinage, or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Bless me! what a fry of fornication is at the door! Shakspeare.

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at best. Graunt.

2. In scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot, because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications on every one that passed by. Ezekiel.

FORNICA'TOR, fôr'nè-kâ-tûr.[521] [166] n. s. [fornicateur, Fr. from fornix, Latin.] One that has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul, as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour. Taylor.

FORNICA'TRESS, fôr'nè-kâ-três. n. s. [from fornicator.] A woman who without marriage co-habits with a man.

See you the fornicatress be remov'd;
Let her have needful but not lavish means. Shaksp.

To FORSA'KE, fôr-sâke'. v. a. pret. forsook; part. pass. forsook or forsaken. [versaaken, Dutch.]

1. To leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.

'Twas now the time when first Saul God forsook,
God Saul; the room in 's heart wild passions took. Cowley.

Orestes comes in time
To save your honour: Pyrrhus cools apace;
Prevent his falshood, and forsake him first:
I know you hate him. A. Philips.

Daughter of Jove, whose arms in thunder wield
Th' avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield,
Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid. Pope.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.

Unwilling I forsook your friendly state,
Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate. Dryden.

3. To desert; to fail.

Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsook;
Fraud, avarice, and force their places took. Dryd.

When ev'n the flying sails were seen no more,
Forsaken of all sight she left the shore. Dryden.

Their purple majesty,
And all those outward shows which we call greatness,
Languish and droop, seem empty and forsaken,
And draw the wond'ring gazer's eyes no more. Rowe.

FORSA'KER, fôr-sâ'kûr.[98] n. s. [from forsake.] Deserter; one that forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forsakers of God. Apocryp.

FORSOO'TH, fôr-sôô*th*'. adv. [ꝑopꝑoðe, Saxon.]

1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore doth Lysander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection? Shakspeare.

A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate. Hayward.

Unlearned persons use such letters as justly express the power or sound of their speech; yet forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French. Holder.

In the East Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew, forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord. Addison.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown. Arbuthnot.

Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them the flumen orationis that Cicero speaks of. Baker.

2. It is supposed to have been once a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferiour, being called showed his attention by answering in the words yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakspeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam. Guardian.

To FORSWE'AR, fôr-swâre'. v. a. pret. forswore; part; forsworn. [ꝑopꝑæꝑnan, Sax.]

1. To renounce upon oath.

I firmly vow
Never to wooe her more; but do forswear her,
As one unworthy all the former favours
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal. Shaksp.

2. To deny upon oath.

And that self chain about his neck,
Which he forswore most monstrously to have. Shakspeare.

Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,
How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!
Like innocence, and as serenely bold
As truth, how loudly he forswears thy gold! Dryd.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to forswear himself; to be perjured; to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn?
To leave fair Sylvia, shall I be forsworn?
To wrong my friends, shall I be much forsworn?
And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath,
Provokes me to this threefold perjury. Shaksp.
One says, he never should endure the sight
Of that forsworn, that wrongs both lands and laws. Daniel.
I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,
Eternal love and endless faith to Theseus;
And yet am false, forsworn: the hallow'd shrine,
That heard me swear, is witness to my falshood. Smith.

To FORSWE'AR, fôr-swâre'. v. n. To swear falsely; to commit perjury.

Take heed, for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.

FO'RTIFIABLE, fôr'tê-fî-â-bl. adj. [from fortify.] What may be fortified.

FORTIFICA'TION, fôr-tê-fâ-kâ'shûn. n. s. [fortification, Fr. from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss. It is either regular, or irregular; and with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary. Harris.
The Phœnicians, though an unwarlike nation, yet understood the art of fortification. Broome.

2. A place built for strength.

The hounds were uncoupled, and the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.
Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgments, might dispense some advantage. Sidney.

3. Addition of strength. Not much used.

To strengthen the infested parts, give some few advices by way of fortification and antidote. Government of the Tongue.

FO'RTIFIER, fôr'tê-fî-ûr. n. s. [from fortify.]

2. To confirm; to encourage.

It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires. Sidney.
To fortify the former opinions Tostatus adds, that those which dwell near the falls of water are deaf from their infancy; but this I hold as feigned. Raleigh.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.

But in-born worth that fortune can controul,
New-strung and stiffer bent her softer soul:
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.
A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues. Locke.

To FO'RTIFY, fôr'tê-fî. v. n. To raise strong places.

Thou us impower'd
To fortify thus far and overlay
With this portentous bridge the dark abyss. Milton.

Of palisadoes, fortins, parapets. Shaksp.

Fo'RTITUDE, fôr'tè-tûde. n. s. [fortitudo, Lat.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shaksp.

The better fortitude
Of patience, and heroick martyrdom,
Unsung. Milton.

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man. Locke.

They thought it reasonable to do all possible honour to the memories of martyrs: partly that others might be encouraged to the same patience and fortitude, and partly that virtue, even in this world, might not lose its reward. Nelson.

2. Strength; force. Not in use.

He wrongs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell! Shaksp.

Fo'RTLET, fôrt'lêt. n. s. [from fort.] A little fort.

Fo'RTNIGHT,[144] fôrt'nite. n. s. [contracted from fourteen-nights, ꝑeoꝑneꝛẏne niꝛc, Sax. It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights: thus we say, this day sevennight. So Tacitus, Non dierum numerum, ut nos, sed noctium computant.] The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.

Hanging on a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnight's space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick. Bacon.

About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad. Dryden.

He often had it in his head, but never with much apprehension, 'till about a fortnight before. Swift.

Fo'RTRESS, fôr'três. n. s. [fortresse, Fr.] A strong hold; a fortified place; a castle of defence.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he overran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses. Spenser.

The trump of death sounds in their hearing shrill;
Their weapon, faith; their fortress was the grave. Fairfax.

God is our fortress, in whose conqu'ring name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks. Shaksp.

There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet makes these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

FORTU'ITOUS,[463] fôr-tû'è-tûs. adj. [fortuit, Fr. fortuitus, Lat.] Accidental; casual; happening by chance.

A wonder it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concourse of atoms. Ray.

If casual concourse did the world compose,
And things and acts fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring? Blackmore.

Fortu'itously, fôr-tû'è-tûs-lè. adv. [from fortuitous.] Accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements. Rogers.

Fo'RTUNATE, fôr'tshû-nâte. adj. [fortunatus, Lat.] Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to miscarriage. Used of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. Shaksp.

He sigh'd; and could not but their fate deplore,
So wretched now, so fortunate before. Dryden.

No, there is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate;
He keeps his object ever full in sight,
And that assurance holds him firm and right:
True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss,
But right before there is no precipice;
Fear makes men look aside, and so their footing miss. Dryden.

Fo'RTUNATELY, fôr'tshû-nâte-lè. adv. [from fortunate.] Happily; successfully.

Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,
And boldly wise, and fortunately great. Prior.

Fo'RTUNATENESS, fôr'tshû-nâte-nês. n. s. [from fortunate.] Happiness; good luck; success.

O me, said she, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate than my sister's greatest unfortunateness. Sidney.

Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Shaksp.

Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel. Shak.

2. The good or ill that befalls man.

Rejoice, said he, to-day;
In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:
Among so brave a people you are they
Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize. Dryden.

The adequate meaning of chance, as distinguished from fortune, in that the latter is understood to befal only rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies. Bentley.

3. The chance of life; means of living.

His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune. Swift.

4. Success, good or bad; event.

This terrestrial globe has been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators. Temple.

No, he shall eat, and die with me, or live;
Our equal crimes shall equal fortune give. Dryden.

5. Estate; possessions.

If thou do'st
As this instructs thee, thou do'st make thy way
To noble fortunes. Shaksp.

That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes. Shaksp.

But tell me, Tityrus, what heav'nly power
Preserv'd your fortunes in that fatal hour? Dryden.

The fate which governs poets thought it fit
He should not raise his fortunes by his wit. Dryden.

He was younger son to a gentleman of a good birth, but small fortune. Swift.

6. The portion of a man or woman: generally of a woman.

I am thought some heiress rich in lands,

Which may produce a story worth the telling,
Of the next sparks that go a fortune stealing. Prologue to Orphan.

The fortune hunters have already cast their eyes upon her, and take care to plant themselves in her view. Spectator.

When miss delights in her spinnet,
A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

7. Futurity; future events.

You who men's fortunes in their faces read,
To find out mine, look not, alas, on me:
But mark her face, and all the features heed;
For only there is writ my destiny. Cowley.

To Fo'RTUNE, fôr'tshûne. v. n. [from the noun.] To befall; to fall out; to happen; to come casually to pass.

It fortuned, as fair it then befel
Behind his back, unweeting, where he stood,
Of ancient time there was a springing well,
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood. Fairy Queen.

It fortuned the same night that a Christian, serving a Turk in the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning. Knolles.

I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortuned. Shaksp.
Here fortun'd Curl to slide. Pope.

Fo'RTUNED, fôr'tshûn'd.[359] adj. Supplied by fortune.

Not th' imperious shew
Of the full fortun'd Cæsar ever shall
Be brook'd with me. Shaksp.

I'll conjure you, I'll fortunetell you. Shaksp.

The gypsies were to divide the money got by stealing linen, or by fortunetelling. Walton.

2. To reveal futurity.

Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmestry, and dines
On all her fortunetelling lines. Cleaveland.

Fo'RTUNETELLER, fôr'tshûn-têl-lûr. n. s. [fortune and teller.] One who cheats common people, by pretending to the knowledge of futurity.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller. Shaksp.

A Welchman being at a sessions-house, and seeing the prisoners hold up their hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers; for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die. Bacon.

Hast thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret things by lot? Duppa.

There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other to the setting up of a fortuneteller. L'Estrange.

Long ago a fortuneteller
Exactly said what now befell her. Swift.

FO'RTY, fôr'tė.[182] adj. [ꝼeopeꝑtiȝ, Sax.] Four times ten.

Short summer lightly has a forward spring. Shak.

6. Quick; ready, hasty.

The mind makes not that benefit it should of the information it receives from civil or natural historians, in being too forward or too slow in making observations on the particular facts recorded in them. Locke.

Had they, who would persuade us that there are innate principles, considered separately the parts out of which these propositions are made, they would not perhaps have been so forward to believe they were innate. Locke.

7. Antecedent; anteriour: opposed to posteriour.

Let us take the instant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them. Shaksp.

8. Not behindhand; not inferiour.

My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as
She is i' th' rear o' our birth. Shaksp.

To FO'RWARD, fôr'wârd. v. a. [from the adverb.]

1. To hasten; to quicken; to accelerate in growth or improvement.

As we house hot country plants, as lemons, to save them; so we may house our own country plants to forward them, and make them come in the cold seasons. Bacon.

To FO'UNDER, fôûn'dûr.[313] v. a. [fondre, French.] To cause such a soreness and tenderness in a horse's foot, that he is unable to set it to the ground.

Phœbus' steeds are founder'd,
Or night kept chain'd below. Shaksp.

I have foundered nine score and odd posts; and here, traveltainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken sir John Coleville of the Dale, a most furious knight: but what of that? he saw me and yielded. Shaksp.

Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly;
So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-finn'd racers of the flood. Dorset.

Brutes find out where their talents lie:
A bear will not attempt to fly:
A founder'd horse will oft debate,
Before he tries a five barr'd gate. Swift.

If you find a gentleman fond of your horse, persuade your master to sell him, because he is vicious, and foundered into the bargain. Swift.

Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, drive them through the hardest and deepest roads, without danger of foundering or breaking their backs, and will be sure to find them neither resty nor vicious. Swift.

FO'UNDLING, fôûnd'ling. n. s. [from found, of find.] A child exposed to chance; a child found without any parent or owner.

We, like bastards, are laid abroad, even as foundlings, to be trained up by grief and sorrow Sidney.

I pass the foundling by, a race unknown,
At doors expos'd, whom matrons make their own,
And into noble families advance
A nameless issue; the blind work of chance.
Dryden

A piece of charity practised by most of the nations about us, is a provision for foundlings, or for those children who are exposed by the barbarity of cruel and unnatural parents. Addison.

The goddess long had mark'd the child's distress,
And long had sought his suff'rings to redress;
She prays the gods to take the foundling's part,
To teach his hands some beneficial art. Gay.

And of them both did foy and tribute raise.
Fairy Queen.

To FRACT, frâkt. v. n. [fractus, Latin.] To break; to violate; to infringe. Found perhaps only in the following passage.

His days and times are past,
And my reliance on his fracted dates
Has smit my credit. Shaksp.

FRA'CTION, frâk'shûn. n. s. [fraction, Fr. fractio, Latin.]

1. The act of breaking; the state of being broken.

The surface of the earth hath been broke, and the parts of it dislocated; several parcels of nature retain still the evident marks of fraction and ruin. Burnet.

2. A broken part of an integral.

The fractions of her faith, arts of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits and greasy reliques
Of her o'er eaten faith, are bound to Diomede.
Shaksp.

Neither the motion of the moon, whereby months are computed, nor the sun, whereby years are accounted, consisteth of whole numbers, but admits of fractions and broken parts. Brown.

Pliny put a round number near the truth, rather than a fraction. Arbuthnot.

FRA'CTIONAL, frâk'shûn-âl.[88] adj. [from fraction.] Belonging to a broken number; comprising a broken number.

We make a cypher the medium between increasing and decreasing numbers, commonly called absolute or whole numbers, and negative or fractional numbers. Cocker.

FRA'CTURE, frâk'tshûre.[461] n. s. [fractura, Latin.]

1. Breach; separation of contiguous parts.

That may do it without any great fracture of the more stable and fixed parts of nature, or the infringement of the laws thereof. Hale.

2. The separation of the continuity of a bone in living bodies.

But thou wilt sin and grief destroy,
That so the broken bones may joy,
And tune together in a well-set song,
Full of his praises,
Who dead men raises;
Fractures well cur'd, make us more strong.
Herbert.

Fractures of the scull are dangerous, not in consequence of the injury done to the cranium itself, but as the brain becomes affected. Sharp.

To FRA'CTURE, frâk'tshûre. v. a. [from the noun.] To break a bone.

The leg was dressed, and the fractured bones united together. Wiseman.

FRA'GILE, frâdje'îl.[140] adj. [fragile, Fr. fragilis, Latin.]

1. Brittle; easily snapped or broken.

To ease them of their griefs,
Their pangs of love, and other incident throes,
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage. Shaksp.

The stalk of ivory is tough, and not fragile. Bacon.

When subtle wits have spun their threads too fine,
'Tis weak and fragile, like Arachne's line. Denham.

A dry stick will be easily broken, when a green one will maintain a strong resistance; and yet in the moist substance there is less rest than in what is drier and more fragile. Glanville.

2. Weak; uncertain; easily destroyed.

Much ostentation, vain of fleshly arms,
And fragile arms, much instrument of war,
Long in preparing, soon to nothing brought,
Before mine eyes thou'st set. Milton.

FRAGI'LITY, frâ-jil'ê-tê. n. s. [from fragile.]

1. Brittleness; easiness to be broken.

To make an induration with toughness, and less fragility, decoct bodies in water for two or three days. Bacon.

2. Weakness; uncertainty; easiness to be destroyed.

Fear the uncertainty of man's fragility, the common chance of war, the violence of fortune. Knolles.

3. Frailty; liableness to fault.

All could not be right, in such a state, in this lower age of fragility. Wotton.

FRA'GMENT, frâg'mênt. n. s. [fragmentum, Lat.] A part broken from the whole; an imperfect piece.

He who late a sceptre did command,
Now grasps a floating fragment in his hand. Dryden.

Cowley, in his unfinished fragment of the Davideis, has shewn us this way to improvement. Watts.

If a thin or plated body, which being of an even thickness, appears all over of one uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton.

Some on painted wood
Transfix'd the fragments, some prepar'd the food. Pope.

FRA'GMENTARY, frâg'mên-târ-ê. adj. [from fragment.] Composed of fragments. Not elegant, nor in use.

She, she is gone; she's gone: when thou know'st this,
What fragmentary rubbish this world is,
Thou know'st, and that it is not worth a thought;
He knows it too too much that thinks it nought. Donne.

FRA'GOR, frâ'gôr.[166] [544] n. s. [Lat.] A noise; a crack; a crash. Not used.

Pursu'd by hideous fragors, as before
The flames descend, they in their breaches roar. Sandys.

FRA'GRANCE, frâ'grânse. } n. s. [fra-
FRA'GRANCY, frâ'grân-sê. } grantia, Lat.] Sweetness of smell; pleasing scent; grateful odour.

Eve separate he spies,
Veil'd in a cloud of fragrance, where she stood
Half spy'd. Milton.

I am more pleased to survey my rows of coleworts and cabbages springing up in their full fragrancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats. Addison.

Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eye;
Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrancy. Garth.

Such was the wine; to quench whose fervent steam
Scarce twenty measures from the living stream
To cool one cup suffic'd: the goblet crown'd,
Breath'd aromatick fragrancies around. Pope.

FRA'GRANT, frâ'grânt.[544] adj. [fragrans, Lat.] Odorous; sweet of smell.

Fragrant the fertile earth
After soft showers; and sweet the coming on
Of grateful evening mild. Milton.

The nymph vouchsaf'd to place
Upon her head the various wreath:
The flow'rs, less blooming than her face;
Their scent less fragrant than her breath. Prior.

FRA'GRANTLY, frâ'grânt'lê. adv. [from fragrant.] With sweet scent.

As the hops begin to change colour, and smell fragrantly, you may conclude them ripe. Mortimer.

1. A basket made of rushes.

2. A rush for weaving baskets.

FRAIL, frâle. adj. [fragilis, Lat.]

1. Weak; easily decaying; subject to casualties; easily destroyed.

I know my body 's of so frail a kind,
As force without, fevers within can kill. Davies.

When with care we have raised an imaginary treasure of happiness, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand. Rogers.

2. Weak of resolution; liable to errour or seduction.

The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may do amiss, then may these also speak amiss: man is frail, and prone to evil, and therefore may soon fail in words. Taylor.

FRA'ILNESS, frâle'nês. n. s. [from frail.] Weakness; instability.

There is nothing among all the frailnesses and uncertainties of this sublunary world so tottering and unstable as the virtue of a coward. Norris.

FRA'ILTY, frâle'tê. n. s. [from frail.]

1. Weakness of resolution; instability of mind; infirmity.

Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. Shaksp.

Nor should'st thou have trusted that to woman's frailty:
Ere I to thee, thou to thyself wast cruel. Milton.

God knows our frailty, pities our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do. Locke.

2. Fault proceeding from weakness; sins of infirmity: in this sense it has a plural.

Love did his reason blind,
And love's the noblest frailty of the mind. Dryd.

Kind wits will those light faults excuse;
Those are the common frailties of the muse. Dryden.

Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;
And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;
Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
And wait, 'till 'tis no sin to mix with thine. Pope.

That christians are now not only like other men in their frailties and infirmities, might be in some degree excusable; but the complaint is, they are like heathens in all the main and chief articles of their lives. Law.

FRAI'SCHEUR, frâ'shûre. n. s. [Fr.] Freshness; coolness. A word foolishly innovated by Dryden.

Hither in summer-evenings you repair,
To taste the fraischeur of the purer air. Dryden.

The one fair fram'd of burnish'd ivory,
The other all with silver overcast. Spenser.

2. To fit one to another.

They rather cut down their timber to frame it, and to do necessaries to their convenient use, than to fight. Abbot.

Hew timber, saw it, frame it, and set it together. Mortimer.

3. To make; to compose.

Then chusing out few words most horrible,
Thereof did verses frame. Spenser.

Fight valiantly to-day;
And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it;
For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour. Shaksp.

4. To regulate; to adjust.

Let us not deceive ourselves by pretending to this excellent knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, if we do not frame our lives according to it. Tillotson.

5. To form to any rule or method by study or precept.

Thou art their soldier; and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way; but thou wilt frame
Thyself forsooth hereafter theirs. Shakspeare.

I have been a truant to the law;
I never yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the law unto my will. Shaksp.

6. To form and digest by thought.

The most abstruse ideas are only such as the understanding frames to itself, by joining together ideas that it had either from objects of sense or from its own operations about them. Locke.

Full of that flame his tender scenes he warms,
And frames his goddess by your matchless charms. Granville.

Urge him with truth to frame his sure replies,
And sure he will; for wisdom never lies. Pope.

How many excellent reasonings are framed in the mind of a man of wisdom and study in a length of years. Watts.

7. To contrive; to plan.

Unpardonable the presumption and insolence in contriving and framing this letter was. Clarendon.

8. To settle; to scheme out.

Though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace. Shakspeare.

9. To invent; to fabricate, in a bad sense: as, to frame a story or lie.

FRAME, frâme. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A fabrick; any thing constructed of various parts or members.

If the frame of the heavenly arch should dissolve itself, if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility, turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker.

Castles made of trees upon frames of timber, with turrets and arches, were anciently matters of magnificence. Bacon.

These are thy glorious works, parent of good!
Almighty! thine this universal frame. Milton.

Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame. Dryden.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame,
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god; and all along
Tough iron plates were clench'd to make it strong. Dryden.

We see this vast frame of the world, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it, all which we, who believe a God, attribute to him as the author. Tillotson.

2. Any thing made so as to enclose or admit something else.

Put both the tube and the vessel it leaned on into a convenient wooden frame, to keep them from mischances. Boyle.

His picture scarcely would deserve a frame. Dryden.

A globe of glass, about eight or ten inches in diameter, being put into a frame where it may be swiftly turned round its axis, will, in turning, shine, where it rubs against the palm of one's hand. Newton.

3. Order; regularity; adjusted series or disposition.

A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still a repairing, ever out of frame,
And never going aright. Shakspeare.

Your steady soul preserves her frame;
In good and evil times the same. Swift.

4. Scheme; order.

Another party did resolve to change the whole frame of the government in state as well as church. Clarendon.

FRANKPLE'DGE, frângk'plêdje. n. s. [franciplegium, Latin; of franc, i. e. liber & pleige, i. e. fidei jussor.] A pledge or surety for freemen.

The ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the publick peace, was that every freeborn man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights, and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs, in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one dozen or other; this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus franciplegii, view of frankpledge. Cowell.

FRA'NTICK, frân'tîk. adj. [corrupted from phrenetick, phreneticus, Latin; φρενητικος.]

1. Mad; deprived of understanding by violent madness; outrageously and turbulently mad.

If Bacchus' merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cybel's frantick rites have made them mad. Fairy Queen.

2. Transported by violence of passion; outrageous; turbulent.

Esteeming, in the frantick error of their minds, the greatest madness in the world to be wisdom, and the highest wisdom foolishness. Hooker.

To such height their frantick passion grows,
That what both love, both hazard to destroy.
Dryden.

She tears her hair, and, frantick in her griefs,
Calls out on Lucia. Addison.

3. Simply mad.

The lover, frantick,
Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt. Shaksp.

FRA'NTICKLY, frân'tik-lê. adv. [from frantick.] Madly; distractedly; outrageously.

Fie, fie, how frantickly I square my talk. Shaksp.

FRA'NTICKNESS, frân'tik-nês. n. s. [from frantick.] Madness; fury of passion; distraction.

FRATE'RNAL, frâ-têr'nâl.[88] adj. [fraternal, Fr. fraternus, Lat.] Brotherly; pertaining to brothers; becoming brothers.

One shall arise
Of proud ambitious heart; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton.

The admonitions, fraternal or paternal, of his fellow christians, or of the governors of the church, then more public reprehensions; and upon their unsuccessfulness, the censures of the church, until he reform and return. Hammond.

Plead it to her,
With all the strength and heats of eloquence
Fraternal love and friendship can inspire. Addison.

If after this command thou fraught the court
With thy unworthiness, thou dy'st. Shaksp.

FRA'UGHTAGE, frâwt'âje. n. s. [from fraught.] Lading; cargo. A bad word.

Our fraughtage, sir,
I have convey'd aboard. Shakspeare.

FRAY, frâ.[220] n. s. [effrayer, to fright, Fr.]

1. A battle; a fight.

Time tells, that on that ever blessed day,
When christian swords with Persian blood were dy'd,
The furious prince Tancredie from that fray
His coward foes chased through forests wide.
Fairfax.

After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought.
Shakspeare.

He left them to the fates in bloody fray,
To toil and struggle through the well-fought day.
Pope.

2. A duel; a combat.

Since, if we fall before th' appointed day,
Nature and death continue long their fray.
Denham.

The boaster Paris oft desir'd the day
With Sparta's king to meet in single fray. Pope.

3. A broil; a quarrel; a riot of violence.

I'll speak between the change of man and boy
With a reed voice, and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth. Shakspeare.

To FRAY, frâ. v. a. [effrayer, Fr.]

1. To fright; to terrify.

The panther, knowing that his spotted hide
Doth please all beasts, but that his looks them fray,
Within a bush his dreadful head doth hide,
To let them gaze, whilst he on them may prey.
Spenser.

So diversely themselves in vain they fray,
Whilst some more bold to measure him stand nigh.
Spenser.

Fishes are thought to be frayed with the motion caused by noise upon the water. Bacon.

These vultures prey only upon carcases, on such stupid minds as have not life and vigour to fray them away. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. [frayer, French] To rub.

FREAK, frêke.[227] n. s. [frech, German, saucy, petulant; ƿræc, Sax. fugitive.]

1. A sudden and causeless change of place.
2. A sudden fancy; a humour; a whim; a capricious prank.

O! but I fear the fickle freaks, quoth she,
Of fortune, and the odds of arms in field.
Fairy Queen.

When that freak has taken possession of a fantastical head, the distemper is incurable.
L'Estrange.

She is restless and peevish, and sometimes in a freak will instantly change her habitation. Spectator.

To vex me more, he took a freak
To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.

To FREAK, frêke. v. a. [A word, I suppose, Scotch, brought into England by Thomson.] To variegate; to checker.

There furry nations harbour:
Sables of glossy black, and dark embrown'd,
Or beauteous, freak'd with many a mingled hue.
Thomson.

FRE'AKISH, frêke'ish. adj. [from freak.] Capricious; humorsome.

It may be a question, whether the wife or the woman was the more freakish of the two; for she was still the same uneasy fop. L'Estrange.

FRE'AKISHLY, frêke'ish-lê. adv. [from freakish.] Capriciously; humorsomely.

FRE'AKISHNESS, frêke'ish-nês. n. s. [from freakish.] Capriciousness; humorsomeness; whimsicalness.

To FREAM, frême.[227] v. n. [fremore, Lat. fremir, Fr.] To growl or grunt as a boar. Bailey.

FRE'CKLE, frêk'kl.[405] n. s. [flech, a spot, German; whence fleckle, freckle.]

1. A spot raised in the skin by the sun.

Ruddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue;
Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin.
Dryden.

2. Any small spot or discoloration.

The cowslips tall her pensioners be;
In their gold coats spots you see:
Those be rubies, fairy favours;
In those freckles live their favours. Shaksp.

The farewell frosts and easterly winds now spot your tulips; therefore cover such with mats, to prevent freckles. Evelyn.

FRE'CKLED, frĕk'kld.[369] adj. [from freckle.] Spotted; maculated; discoloured with small spots.

Sometimes we'll angle at the brook,
The freckled trout to take
With silken worms. Drayton.

The even mead that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip,
Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness. Shaksp.

Now thy face charms ev'ry shepherd,
Spotted over like a leopard;
And thy freckled neck display'd,
Envy breeds in ev'ry maid. Swift.

FRE'CKLY, frĕk'klē. adj. [from freckle.] Full of freckles.

FRED, frĕd. The same with peace; upon which our forefathers called their sanctuaries fredstole, i. e. the seats of peace. So Frederick is powerful or wealthy in peace; Winfred, victorious peace; Reinfred, sincere peace. Gibson.

FREE, frēē.[246] adj. [ꝼꝛeah, Saxon; vry Dutch.]

1. At liberty; not a vassal; not enslaved; not a prisoner; not dependant.

A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any condition of subjection. Temple.

Free, what, and fetter'd with so many chains? Dryden.

How can we think any one freer than to have the power to do what he will? Locke.

This wretched body trembles at your pow'r:
Thus far could fortune; but she can no more:
Free, to herself my potent mind remains,
Nor fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains. Prior.

Set an unhappy pris'ner free,
Who ne'er intended harm to thee. Prior.

2. Uncompelled; unrestrained.

Their use of meats was not like unto our ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a publick constitution for the ordering of the church. Hooker.

Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now. Shaksp.

It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not indifferent. South.

3. Not bound by fate; not necessitated.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell:
Not free, what proof could they have given sincere
Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
Where only what they needs must do, appear'd,
Not what they would? Milton.

4. Permitted; allowed.

Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me as for you? Shaksp.

Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure; and commands to some, leaves free to all. Milton.

To gloomy cares my thoughts alone are free,
Ill the gay sports with troubled thoughts agree. Pope.

5. Licentious; unrestrained.

O conspiracy!
Sham'st thou to shew thy dang'rous brow by night,
When evils are most free? Shaksp.

Physicians are too free upon the subject, in the conversation of their friends. Temple.

The criticks have been very free in their censures. Felton.

I know there are to whose presumptuous thoughts,
Those freer beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults. Pope.

6. Open; ingenuous; frank.

Castalio, I have doubts within my heart;
Will you be free and candid to your friend? Otway.

7. Acquainted; conversing without reserve.

'Tis not to make me jealous,
To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well:
Where virtue is, these make more virtuous. Shaksp.

Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great laughter. Hakewill.

Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe. Prior

8. Liberal; not parsimonious: with of.

Glo'ster too, a foe to citizens,
O'ercharging your free purses with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion. Shaksp.

No statute in his favour says,
How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I, who at sometimes spend as other spare. Pope.

Alexandrian verses, of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty: Mr. Dryden has been too free of these in his latter works. Pope.

9. Frank; not gained by importunity; not purchased.

We wanted words to express our thanks: his noble free offers left us nothing to ask. Bacon.

10. Clear from distress.

Who alone suffers, suffers most i' th' mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind. Shaksp.

11. Guiltless; innocent.

Make mad the guilty, and appall the free,
Confound the ign'rant. Shaksp.

My hands are guilty, but my heart is free. Dryd.

12. Exempt: with of anciently; more properly from.

These
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of. Shaksp.

Who fears not to do ill, yet fears the name;
And free from conscience, is a slave to fame. Denham.

Let envy, then, those crimes within you see,
From which the happy never must be free. Dryd.

Their steeds around,
Free from the harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.

The will free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions. Locke.

13. Invested with franchises; possessing any thing without vassalage; admitted to the privileges of any body: with of.

He therefore makes all birds of every sect
Free of his farm, with promise to respect
Their several kinds alike, and equally protect. Dryden.

What do'st thou make a shipboard? To what end
Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?
Stark-staring mad, that thou should'st tempt the sea? Dryden.

14. Without expense; by charity, as a freeschool.

To FREE, frēē. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To set at liberty; to rescue from slavery or captivity; to manumit; to loose.

The child was prisoner to the womb, and is
By law and process of great nature thence Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to
The anger of the king, nor guilty of,
(If any be) the trespass of the queen. Shaksp.

He recovered the temple, free'd the city, and upheld the laws which were going down. 2 Mac.

Can'st thou no other master understand,
Than him that free'd thee by the pretor's wand? Dryden.

Should thy coward tongue
Spread its cool poison through the martial throng,
My jav'lin shall revenge so base a part,
And free the soul that quivers in thy heart. Pope.

2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill: with of or from.

It is no marvail that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniencies the passions of those meetings gave him than to dissolve them. Clarendon.

Hercules
Freed Erymanthus from the foaming boar. Dryden.

Our land is from the rage of tigers freed. Dryd.

3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.

The chaste Sibylla shall your steps convey,
And blood of offer'd victims free the way. Dryden.

Fierce was the fight; but hast'ning to his prey,
By force the furious lover freed his way. Dryden.

This master-key
Frees every lock, and leads us to his person. Dryd.

4. To banish; to send away; to rid. Not in use.

We may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives. Shaksp.

Never any Sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel.

5. To exempt.

For he that is dead is free'd from sin. Romans.

FREEBO'OTER, frēē-bōō'tŭr. n. s. [free and booty.] A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

Perkin was not followed by any English of name, his forces consisted mostly of base people and freebooters, fitter to spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom. Bacon.

The earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish frigates, or such freebooters as sailed under their commission, taken all the seamen. Clarendon.

FREEBO'OTING, frēē-bōō'tĭng. n. s. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.

Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handsomely in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freebooting, it is his best and surest friend. Spenser.

FRE'EBORN, frēē'bŏrn. adj. [free and born.] Not a slave; inheriting liberty.

O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,
And crush your freeborn brethren of the world! Dryden.

I shall speak my thoughts like a freeborn subject, such things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am sure no Frenchman durst. Dryd.

Shall freeborn men in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame;
Who from consent and custom draw
The same right to be rul'd by law,
Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.

FREECHA'PPEL, frēē-tshăp'ĕl. n. s. [free and chappel.] Such chappels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chappel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation. Cowell.

FRE'ECOST, frēē'kŏst. n. s. [free and cost.] Without expense; free from charges.

We must not vouch any man for an exact master in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freecost, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing. South.

FRE'EDMAN, frēēd'măn. n. s. [free and man.] A slave manumitted. Libertus.

The freedman jostles, and will be preferr'd;
First come, first serv'd, he cries. Dryden.

FRE'EDOM, frēē'dŭm.[166] n. s. [from free.]

1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.

The laws themselves they do specially rage at, as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom. Spenser.

O freedom! first delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their masters find,
The privilege of doles; nor yet t' inscribe
Their names in this or t' other Roman tribe:
That false enfranchisement with ease is found;
Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryden.

2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.

By our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shak.

3. Power of enjoying franchises.

This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people. Swift.

4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or predetermination.

I else must change
Their nature, and revoke the high decree
Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd
Their freedom; they themselves ordain'd their fall. Milton.

In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act. South.

5. Unrestraint.

I will that all the feasts and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Maccabees.

6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.

The freedom of their state lays them under a greater necessity of always chusing and doing the best things. Law.

7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.

FREEFO'OTED, frēē-fût'ĕd. adj. [free and foot.] Not restrained in the march.

We will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too freefooted. Shaksp.

FREEHEA'RTED, frēē-hûr'tĕd. adj. [free and heart.] Liberal; unrestrained.

Love must freehearted be, and voluntary;
And not enchanted, or by fate constrained. Davies.

FREEHO'LD, frēē'hōld. n. s. [free and hold.] That land or tenement which a man holds in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life.

Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seisure. Freehold is sometimes taken in opposition to villanage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or foreland, that is, holden without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Cowell.

No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record. Bacon.

There is an unspeakable pleasure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addison.

My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.

I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give consent. Swift.

FREEHO'LDER, frēē'hōl-dûr. n. s. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.

As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.

FREE'LY, frēē'lē. adv. [from free.]

1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependance.

2. Without restraint; heartily; with full gust.

If my son were my husband, I would freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would shew most love. Shaksp.

3. Plentifully; lavishly.

I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains
I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely. Shaksp.

4. Without scruple; without reserve.

Let such teach others who themselves excel,
And censure freely who have written well. Pope.

5. Without impediment.

To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Ascham.

The path to peace is virtue: what I show,
Thyself may freely on thyself bestow:
Fortune was never worshipp'd by the wise;
But set aloft by fools, usurps the skies. Dryden.

6. Without necessity; without predetermination.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell. Milton.

He leaves us to chuse with the liberty of reasonable beings; they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do also freely reject it. Rogers.

7. Frankly; liberally; without cost.

By nature all things have an equally common use; nature freely and indifferently opens the bosoms of the universe to all mankind. South.

8. Spontaneously; of its own accord.

FRE'EMAN, frēē'mân.[88] n. s. [free and man.]

1. One not a slave; not a vassal.

Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all freemen? Shaksp.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chusing or doing the worst, be liberty, true liberty, madmen and fools are only the freemen. Locke.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.

He made us freemen of the continent,
Whom nature did like captives treat before. Dryd.

What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Addison.

FREEMI'NDED, frēē-mīnd'ĕd. adj. [free and mind.] Unperplexed; without load of care.

To be freeminded and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting. Bacon.

FRE'ENESS, frēē'nĕs. n. s. [from free.]

1. The state or quality of being free.

2. Openness; unreservedness; ingenuousness; candour.

The reader may pardon it, if he please, for the freeness of the confession. Dryden.

3. Generosity; liberality.

I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving. Sprat.

FREESCHO'OL, frēē'skōōl. n. s. [free and school.] A school in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one freeschool at least erected in every diocese. Davies.

Two clergymen stood candidates for a small freeschool; a gentleman who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FREESPO'KEN, frēē-spō'k'n.[103] adj. [free and spoken.] Accustomed to speak without reserve.

Nerva one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courses as Marcellus and Regulus had done: the emperor fell into discourse of the injustice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, as if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a freespoken senator, said, Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.

FRE'ESTONE, frēē'stōne. n. s. [free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building.

Freestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.

I saw her hand; she has a leathern hand, a freestone-coloured hand. Shaksp.

The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat. Addison.

FREETHI'NKER, frēē-*thi*nk'ûr. n. s. [free and think.] A libertine; a contemner of religion.

Atheist is an old-fashioned word: I'm a freethinker, child. Addison.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against christianity? and therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabrick must fall to the ground. Swift.

FREEWI'LL, frēē-wĭll'. n. s. [free and will.]

1. The power of directing our own actions without restraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntariness; spontaneity.

I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Ezra.

FREEWO'MAN, frēē'wûm-ûn. n. s. [free and woman.] A woman not enslaved.

All her ornaments are taken away; of a freewoman she is become a bondslave. 1 Maccabees.

To FREEZE, frēēze.[246] v. n. preter. froze. [vriesen, Dutch.]

1. To be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath a perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun. Locke.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,

And mountain tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing. Shaksp.
Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shaksp.
Heav'n froze above severe, the clouds congeal,
And thro' the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryden.

To FREEZE, frēēze. v. a. pret. froze; part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.
2. To kill by cold.
When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me
Ev'n in his garments! Shaksp.
My master and mistress are almost frozen to death. Shaksp.
3. To chill by the loss of power or motion.
I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life. Shaksp.
Death came on amain,
And exercis'd below his iron reign;
Then upward to the seat of life he goes:
Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryden.

To FREIGHT, frāte.[349 393] v. a. preter freighted; part. fraught; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [fretter, French.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.
The princes
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war. Shaksp.
Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas;
With one frail interposing plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by every wave. Dryden.
Freighted with iron, from my native land,
I steer my voyage. Pope.
2. To load as the burden; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted.
I would
Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere
It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and
The freighting souls within her. Shaksp.

FREIGHT, frāte. n. s.

1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded.
He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight;
The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryden.
2. The money due for transportation of goods.

FRE'IGHTER, frāte'ûr. n. s. [fretteur, Fr.] He who freights a vessel.

FREN, frēn. n. s. A stranger. An old word wholly forgotten here; but retained in Scotland. Beattie.
But now from me his madding mind is start,
And wooes the widow's daughter of the glen;
And now fair Rosalind hath bred his smart,
So now his friend is changed for a fren. Spenser.

FRENCH chalk, frēnsh'tshâwk'. n. s. An indurated clay, extremely dense, of a smooth glossy surface, and soft and unctuous to the touch; of a grayish white colour, variegated with a dusky green. Hill.
French chalk is unctuous to the touch, as steatites is, but harder, and nearer approaching the consistence of stone. Wood.

To FRE'NCHIFY, frēnsh'ē-fi. v. a. [from French.] To infect with the manner of France; to make a coxcomb.
They misliked nothing more in king Edward the confessor than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden.
Has he familiarly dislik'd
Your yellow starch, or said your doublet
Was not exactly Frenchified? Shaksp.

FRE'NETICK, frē-nēt'ĭk or frēn'ē-tĭk. adj. [frenetique, Fr. φρενητικος; generally therefore written phrenetick.] Mad; distracted.
He himself impotent,
By means of his frenetick malady. Daniel.

FRE'NZY, frēn'zē. n. s. [φρενῖτις; phrenitis, Latin: whence phrenetisy, phrenetsy, phrenzy, or frenzy.] Madness; distraction of mind; alienation of understanding; any violent passion approaching to madness.
That knave, Ford, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him that ever governed frenzy. Shakspeare.
True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides;
All else is towering frenzy and distraction. Addison.
Why such a disposition of the body induceth sleep, another disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions a lethargy or frenzy: this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties. Bentley.

FRE'QUENCE, frē'kwēnse.[544] n. s. [frequence, Fr. frequentia, Lat.] Crowd; concourse; assembly.
The frequence of degree,
From high to low throughout. Shaksp.
He, in full frequence bright
Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake. Milton.

FRE'QUENCY, frē'kwēn-sē. n. s. [frequentia, Latin.]

1. Common occurrence; the condition of being often seen or done.
Should a miracle be indulged to one, others would think themselves equally entitled to it; and if indulged to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle: its force and influence would be lost by the frequency of it. Atterbury.
2. Concourse; full assembly.
Thou cam'st ere while into this senate: who
Of such a frequency, so many friends
And kindred thou hast here, saluted thee?
Ben Jonson.

FRE'QUENT, frē'kwēnt.[492] adj. [frequent, Fr. frequens, Lat.]

1. Often done; often seen; often occurring.
The frequenter these times are, the better. Duty of Man.
An ancient and imperial city falls;

And while the dread of judgment past remain
Fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity,
With some regard to what is just and right,
Shall lead their lives. Milton.
That love which first was set, will first decay;
Mine of a fresher date will longer stay. Dryden.
5. In a state like that of recentness.
We will revive those times, and in our memories
Preserve and still keep fresh like flowers in waters. Denham.
With such a care
As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still preserve them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.
Thou sun, said I, fair light!

And thou enlighten'd earth, so fresh and gay! Milton.

Think not, 'cause men flatt'ring say,
Y' are fresh as April, sweet as May,
Bright as is the morning star,
That you are so. Carew.

6. Recent; newly come.

Amidst the spirits Palinurus press'd;
Yet fresh from life, a new admitted guest. Dryden.
Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,
The criminals are seiz'd upon the place;
Stiff in denial, as the law appoints,
On engines they distend their tortur'd joints. Dryden.

7. Repaired from any loss or diminution.

Nor lies she long; but as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain,
Is sav'd to day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

About her little frigat, therein making way. Fairy Queen.

FRIGEFA'CTION, frĭd-jĕ-făk'shŭn[530] n. s. [frigus and facio, Latin.] The act of making cold.

To FRIGHT, frīte.[393] v. a. [ꝼꝛıȝhtıan, Saxon.] To terrify; to disturb with fear; to shock with fear; to daunt; to dismay. This was in the old authors more frequently written affright, as it is always found in the Scripture.

The herds
Were strongly clam'rous in the frighted fields. Shaksp.

Such a numerous host
Fled not in silence through the frighted deep,
With ruin upon ruin, rout on rout,
Confusion worse confounded. Milton.

Cherubic watch, and of a sword that flame
Wide-waving, all approach far off to fright,
And guard all passage to the tree of life. Milton.

Nor exile or danger can fright a brave spirit,
With innocence guarded,
With virtue rewarded,
I make of my sufferings a merit. Dryden.

The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross, and at a distance: things thus offered to the mind carry the shew of nothing but difficulty. Locke.

Whence glaring oft with many a broaden'd orb,
He frights the nations. Thomson.

FRIGHT, frīte. n. s. [from the verb.] A sudden terrour.

You, if your goodness does not plead my cause,
May think I broke all hospitable laws,
To bear you from your palace-yard by might,
And put your noble person in a fright. Dryden.

To FRI'GHTEN, frī't'n.[103] v. a. To terrify; to shock with dread.

The rugged bear's, or spotted lynx's brood,
Frighten the valleys, and infest the wood. Prior.

FRI'GHTFUL, frīte'fŭl. adj. [from fright.]

1. Terrible; dreadful; full of terrour.

Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy,
Thy schooldays frightful, desp'rate, wild, and furious. Shaksp.

2. Disagreeably; not beautifully. A woman's word.

Then to her glass; and Betty, pray,
Don't I look frightfully to-day? Swift.

FRI'GHTFULNESS, frīte'fŭl-nĕs. n. s. [from frightful.] The power of impressing terrour.

FRI'GID, frĭdje'ĭd.[544] adj. [frigidus, Latin.]

1. Cold; wanting warmth. In this sense it is seldom used but in science.

In the torrid zone the heat would have been intolerable, and in the frigid zones the cold would have destroyed both animals and vegetables. Cheyne.

2. Wanting warmth of affection.

3. Impotent; without warmth of body.

4. Dull; without fire of fancy.

If justice Phillip's costive head
Some frigid rhymes disburses,
They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.

FRIGI'DITY, frĕ-jĭd'ĕ-tē. n. s. [frigiditas, Latin.]

1. Coldness; want of warmth.

2. Dulness; want of intellectual fire.

Driving at these as at the highest elegancies, which are but the frigidities of wit. Brown.

Of the two extremes, one would sooner pardon phrenzy than frigidity. Pope.

3. Want of corporeal warmth.

The boiling blood of youth hinders that serenity which is necessary to severe intenseness; and the frigidity of decrepit age is as much its enemy, by reason of its dulling moisture. Glanville.

4. Coldness of affection.

FRI'GIDLY, frĭdje'ĭd-lē. adv. [from frigid.] Coldly; dully; without affection.

FRI'GIDNESS, frĭdje'ĭd-nĕs. n. s. [from frigid.] Coldness; dulness; want of affection.

We know what belongs to a frippery. Shaksp.

Lurana is a frippery of bankrupts, who fly thither from Druina to play their after-game. Howel.

2. Old clothes; cast dresses; tattered rags.

Poor poet ape, that would be thought our chief,
Whose works are ev'n the frippery of wit;
From brocage, is become so bold a thief,
As we, the robb'd, leave rage, and pity it.
Ben Jonson.

The fighting-place now seamen's rage supply,
And all the tackling is a frippery. Donne.

Ragfair is a place near the Tower of London, where old cloaths and frippery are sold. Pope.

To FRISK, frîsk. v. n. [frizzare, Ital.]

1. To leap; to skip.

Put water into a glass, and wet your finger, and draw it round about the lip of the glass, pressing it somewhat hard; and after drawing it some few times about, it will make the water frisk, and sprinkle up in a fine dew. Bacon.

The fish fell a frisking in the net. L'Estrange.

Whether every one hath experimented this troublesome intrusion of some frisking ideas, which thus importune the understanding, and hinder it from being better employed, I know not. Locke.

2. To dance in frolick or gayety.

We are as twinn'd lambs, that did frisk i' th' sun,
And bleat the one at the other: what we chang'd
Was innocence for innocence; we knew not
The doctrine of ill-doing. Shaksp.

About them frisking play'd
All beasts of th' earth. Milton.

A wanton heifer frisked up and down in a meadow, at ease and pleasure. L'Estrange.

Watch the quick motions of the frisking tail,
Then serve their fury with the rushing male.
Dryden.

So Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,
And beasts in gambols frisk'd before their honest god. Dryden.

Oft to the mountain's airy tops advanc'd,
The frisking satyrs on the summits danc'd.
Addison.

Those merry blades
That frisk it under Pindus' shades. Prior.

Peg faints at the sound of an organ, and yet will dance and frisk at the noise of a bagpipe.
Arbuthnot.

Sly hunters thus, in Borneo's isle,
To catch a monkey by a wile,
The mimick animal amuse;
They place before him gloves and shoes;
Which when the brute puts awkward on,
All his agility is gone:
In vain to frisk or climb he tries;
The huntsmen seize the grinning prize. Swift.

FRISK, frîsk. n. s. [from the verb.] A frolick; a fit of wanton gayety.

FRI'SKER, frîsk'ûr. n. s. [from frisk.] A wanton; one not constant or settled.

Now I will wear this and now I will wear that;
Now I will wear I cannot tell what:
All new fashions be pleasant to me:
Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;
What should I do but set cock on the hoop?
Camden.

FRI'SKINESS, frîsk'ê-nês. n. s. [from frisk.] Gayety; liveliness. A low word.

FRI'SKY, frîsk'ê. adj. [frisque, Fr. from frisk.] Gay; airy. A low word.

My racks and tortures soon shall drive them hence,
Break all their nerves, and fritter all their sense.
Pope.

How prologues into prefaces decay,
And these to notes are fritter'd quite away.
Dunciad.

FRI'VOLOUS, frîv'ô-lûs. adj. [frivolus, Lat. frivole, French.] Slight; trifling; of no moment.

It is frivolous to say we ought not to use bad ceremonies of the church of Rome, and presume all such bad as it pleaseth themselves to dislike.
Hooker.

These seem very frivolous and fruitless; for, by the breach of them, little damage can come to the commonwealth. Spenser.

She tamed the brinded lioness,
And spotted mountain pard; but set at nought
The frivolous bolt of Cupid. Milton.

Those things which now seem frivolous and slight
Will be of serious consequence to you,
When they have made you once ridiculous.
Roscommon.

All the impeachments in Greece and Rome agreed in a notion of being concerned, in point of honour, to condemn whatever person they impeached, however frivolous the articles, or however weak the proofs. Swift.

I will not defend any mistake, and do not think myself obliged to answer every frivolous objection.
Arbuthnot.

FRI'VOLOUSNESS, frîv'ô-lûs-nês. n. s. [from frivolous.] Want of importance; trifling-ness.

Therein I spy'd this yellow frizled hair. Gay.

FRI'ZZLER, friz'zlûr. n. s. [from frizzle.] One that makes short curls.

FRO, frô. adv. [of ꝼꝛa, Sax.]

1. Backward; regressively. It is only used in opposition to the word to; to and fro, backward and forward, to and from.

The Carthaginians having spoiled all Spain, rooted out all that were affected to the Romans; and the Romans having recovered that country, did cut off all that favoured the Carthaginians; so betwixt them both, to and fro, there was scarce a native Spaniard left. Spenser.

As when a heap of gathered thorns is cast
Now to, now fro before th' autumnal blast,
Together clung, it rolls around the field. Pope.

2. It is a contraction of from, not now used.

They turn round like grindlestones,
Which they dig out fro' the delves,
For their bairns bread, wives, and selves.
Ben Jonson.

FROCK, frôk. n. s. [froc, French.]

1. A dress; a coat.

That monster, custom, is angel yet in this,
That to the use of actions fair and good,
He likewise gives a frock or livery,
That aptly is put on. Shaksp.

FRO'LICK, frôl'îk. adj. [vrolijck, Dut.] Gay; full of levity; full of pranks.

We fairies that do run
By the triple Hecate's team,
From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolick. Shaksp.

Whether, as some sages sing,
The frolick wind that breathes the spring,
Zephyr with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a maying;
There on beds of violets blue,
And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew,
Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonnair. Milton.

Who ripe, and frolick of his full grown age,
Roving the Celtick and Iberian fields.
At last betakes him to this ominous wood. Milton.

The gay, the frolick, and the loud. Waller.

FRO'LICK, frôl'îk. n. s. [from the adjective.] A wild prank; a flight of whim and levity.

He would be at his frolick once again,
And his pretensions to divinity. Roscommon.

Alcibiades, having been formerly noted for the like frolicks and excursions, was immediately accused of this. Swift.

While rain depends, the pensive cat gives o'er
Her frolicks, and pursues her tale no more. Swift.

To FRO'LICK, frôl'îk. v. n. [from the noun.] To play wild pranks; to play tricks of levity and gayety.

Manly spirit and genius plays not tricks with words, nor frolicks with the caprice of a frothy imagination. Glanville.

Then to her new love let her go,
And deck her in golden array;
Be finest at every fine show,
And frolick it all the long day. Rowe.

Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn
Oft interlac'd occur; and both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound! Philips.

FRU'GAL, frû'gâl.[88] adj. [frugalis, Lat. frugal, Fr.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.
Reasoning, I oft admire,
How nature wise and frugal could commit
Such disproportions, with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,
Greater so manifold to this one use. Milton.
And wing'd purveyors his sharp hunger fed
With frugal scraps of flesh and maslin bread. Harte.
If through mists he shoots his sullen beams,
Frugal of light, in loose and straggling streams,
Suspect a drisling day Dryden.

FRU'GALLY, frû'gâl-ê. adv. [from frugal.] Parsimoniously; sparingly; thriftily.
Mean time young Pasimond his marriage press'd,
And frugally resolv'd, the charge to shun,
To join his brother's bridal with his own. Dryden.

FRUGA'LITY, frû-gâl'ê-tê. n. s. [frugalité, French; frugalitas, Latin.] Thrift; parsimony; good husbandry.
As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink. Bacon.
Frugality and bounty too,
Those diff'ring virtues, meet in you. Waller.
In this frugality of your praises, some things I cannot omit. Dryden.
The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lines: it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony. Arbuthnot.

FRUGI'FEROUS, frû-jîf'fêr-ŭs. adj. [frugifer, Lat.] Bearing fruit. Ainsworth.

FRUIT, frôôt.[343] n. s. [fructus, Latin; frwyth, Welsh; fruit, French.]
1. The product of a tree or plant in which the seeds are contained.
The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality. Shaksp.
2. That part of a plant which is taken for food.
By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.
See how the rising fruits the gardens crown,
Imbibe the sun, and make his light their own. Blackmore.
3. Production.
The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth. Ephesians
4. The offspring of the womb; the young of any animal.
Can'st thou their reck'nings keep? the time compute,
When their swoln bellies shall enlarge the fruit? Sandys.
5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.
What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories? Where are the fruits of them at this day? Or of what benefit will they be to posterity? Swift.
Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.
6. The effect or consequence of any action.
She blushed when she considered the effect of granting; she was pale when she remembered the fruits of denying. Sidney.
They shall eat of the fruit of their own way. Proverbs.

FRU'ITAGE, frôôt'îdje.[90] n. s. [fruitage, Fr.] Fruit collectively; various fruits.
In heav'n the trees
Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines
Yield nectar. Milton.
Greedily they pluck'd
The fruitage, fair to sight, like that which grew
Near that bituminous lake where Sodom flam'd. Milton.
What is more ordinary with them than the taking in flowers and fruitage for the garnishing of their work? More.

FRUIT'BEARER, frôôt'bâr-ûr. n. s. [fruit and bearer.] That which produces fruit.
Trees, especially fruitbearers, are often infected with the measles. Mortimer.

FRU'ITBEARING, frôôt'bâr-îng. adj. [fruit and bear.] Having the quality of producing fruit.
By this way graft trees of different kinds one on another, as fruitbearing trees on those that bear not. Mortimer.

FRUI'TERER, frôôt'êr-ûr. n. s. [fruitier, Fr.] One who trades in fruit.
I did fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's-inn. Shaksp.
Walnuts the fruit'rer's hand in Autumn stain;
Blue plumbs and juicy pears augment his gain. Gay.

FRU'ITERY, frôôt'êr-ê. n. s. [fruiterie, French.]
1. Fruit collectively taken.
Oft, notwithstanding all thy care
To help thy plants, on the small fruitery
Exempt from ills, an oriental blast
Disastrous flies. Philips.
2. A fruit-loft; a repository for fruit.

FRU'ITFUL, frôôt'fûl. adj. [fruit and full.]
1. Fertile; abundantly productive; liberal of vegetable product.
If she continued cruel, he could no more sustain his life than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence. Sidney.
The earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n, so small,
Nor glist'ring, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun that barren shines,
Whose virtue on itself works no effect,
But in the fruitful earth. Milton.
2. Actually bearing fruit.
Adonis' gardens,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next. Shaksp.
3. Prolifick; childbearing; not barren.
Hear, Nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father!
Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend
To make this creature fruitful:
Into her womb convey sterility. Shaksp.

Male he created thee, but thy consort
Female for race, then bless'd mankind, and said,
Be fruitful, multiply, and fill the earth;
Subdue it, and throughout dominion hold. Milton.

I have copied nature, making the youths amorous and the damsels fruitful. Gay.

4. Plenteous; abounding in any thing.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's publick posts retire,
Me into foreign realms my fate conveys,
Through nations fruitful of immortal lays.
Addison.

FRU'ITFULLY, frôôt'fûl-é. adv. [from fruitful.]

1. In such a manner as to be prolifick.

How sacred seeds of sea, and air, and earth,
And purer fire through universal night
And empty space did fruitfully unite. Roscommon.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.

You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered. Shaksp.

Fruitfully abound. Dryden.

FRU'ITFULNESS, frôôt'fûl-nês. n. s. [from fruitful.]

1. Fertility; fecundity; plentiful production.

Neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulness to any part of the earth, nor the same virtue to any plant thereon growing, that they had before the flood. Raleigh.

2. The quality of being prolifick, or bearing many children.

The goddess, present at the match she made,
So bless'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryd.

3. Exuberant abundance.

The remedy of fruitfulness is easy, but no labour will help the contrary; I will like and praise some things in a young writer, which yet, if he continues in, I cannot but justly hate him for. Ben Jonson.

FRU'ITGROVES, frôôt'grôvz. n. s. [fruit and groves.] Shades, or close plantations of fruit-trees.

The faithful slave,
Whom to my nuptial train Icarius gave,
To tend the fruitgroves. Pope.

FRUITION, frû-ish'ûn. n. s. [fruor, Latin.] Enjoyment; possession; pleasure given by possession or use.

Man doth not seem to rest satisfied either with fruition of that wherewith his life is preserved, or with performance of such actions as advance him most deservedly in estimation. Hooker.

I am driv'n, by breath of her renown,
Either to seek shipwreck, or to arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love. Shaksp.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Ev'n all they wish, and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys.

Wit once, like beauty, without art or dress,
Naked and unadorned, could find success;
'Till by fruition, novelty destroy'd,
The nymph must find new charms to be enjoy'd.
Granville.

Affliction generally disables a man from pursuing those vices in which the guilt of men consists: if the affliction be on his body, his appetites are weakened, and capacity of fruition destroyed. Rogers.

FRU'ITIVE, frû'é-tiv. adj. [from the noun.] Enjoying; possessing; having the power of enjoyment. A word not legitimate.

To whet our longings for fruitive or experimental knowledge, it is reserved among the prerogatives of being in heaven, to know how happy we shall be when there. Boyle.

FRU'ITLESLY, frôôt'lês-lé. adv. [from fruitless.] Vainly; idly; unprofitably.

After this fruit curiosity fruitlesly enquireth, and confidence blindly determineth. Brown.

Walking they talk'd, and fruitlesly divin'd
What friend the priestess by those words design'd.
Dryden.

FRU'ITLESS, frôôt'lês. adj. [from fruit.]

1. Barren of fruit; not bearing fruit.

The Spaniards of Mexico, for the first forty years, could not make our kind of wheat bear seed; but it grew up as high as the trees, and was fruitless. Raleigh.

2. Vain; productive of no advantage; idle; unprofitable.

O! let me not, quoth he, return again
Back to the world, whose joys so fruitless are;
But let me here for ay, in peace remain,
Or straightway on that last long voyage fare. Spens.

Serpent! we might have spar'd our coming hither,
Fruitless to me, though fruit be here t' excess.
Milton.

The other is for entirely waving all searches into antiquity, in relation to this controversy, as being either needless or fruitless. Waterland.

3. Having no offspring.

Upon my head they placed a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe;
No son of mine succeeding. Shaksp.

FRU'IT-TIME, frôôt'time. n. s. [fruit and time.] The autumn; the time for gathering fruit.

FRU'IT-TREE, frôôt'trêê. n. s. [fruit and tree.] A tree of that kind whose principal value arises from the fruit produced by it.

Lady, by yonder blessed moon I vow,
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops.
Shaksp.

They possessed houses full of all goods, wells digged, vineyards and oliveyards, and fruit-trees in abundance. Nehemiah.

All with a border of rich fruit-trees crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty mound.
Waller.

FRUMENTA'CIOUS, frû-mên-tâ'shûs. adj. [from frumentum, Latin.] Made of grain. Dict.

To FRUSH, frûsh. v. a. [froisser, Fr.] To break, bruise, or crush. Hanmer.

I like thy armour well;
I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it. Shaksp.

FRUSH, frûsh. n. s. [from the verb.] A sort of tender horn that grows in the middle of the sole, and at some distance from the toe: it divides into two branches, running toward the heel in the form of a fork. Farrier's Dict.

FRUSTRA'NEOUS, frûs-trâ'nê-ûs. adj. [frustra, Latin.] Vain; useless; unprofitable; without advantage.

Their attempts being so frustraneous, and the demonstrations to the contrary so perspicuous, it is a marvel that any man should be zealously affected in a cause that has neither truth nor any honest usefulness in it. More.

He timely withdraws his frustraneous baffled kindnesses, and sees the folly of endeavouring to stroke a tyger into a lamb, or to court an Ethiopian out of his colour. South.

To FRU'STRATE,[91] frûs'trâte. v. a. [frustror, Lat. frustrer, Fr.]

1. To defeat; to disappoint; to balk.

It is an axiom of nature, that natural desire cannot utterly be frustrate. Hooker.

I survive,
To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out
Rotten opinion. Shaksp.

Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will;
Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill. Dryden.

Not more almighty to resist our might,
Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles.
Milton.

2. To make null; to nullify.

The act of parliament which gave all his lands to the queen, did cut off and frustrate all such conveyances. Spenser.

Now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam; and by vanquishing
Temptation, hast regain'd lost paradise,
And frustrated the conquest fraudulent. Milton.

The peculiar strength of the motive may of itself perhaps contribute to frustrate the efficacy of it, rendering it liable to be suspected by him to whom it is addressed. Atterbury.

FRU'STRATE, frûs'trâte. participial adj. [from the verb.]

1. Vain; ineffectual; useless; unprofitable.

He is drown'd
Whom thus we stray to find; and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search on land. Shaksp.

The ruler of the province of Judea being by Julian busied in the re-edifying of this temple, flaming balls of fire issuing near the foundation, and oft consuming the workmen, made the enterprize frustrate. Raleigh.

All at once employ their thronging darts;
But out of order thrown, in air they join,
And multitude makes frustrate the design. Dryd.

2. Null; void.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hooker.

FRUSTRA'TION, frûs-trâ'shûn. n. s. [frustratio, Lat. from frustrate.] Disappointment; defeat.

In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power countermands their deepest projects, splits their counsels, and smites their most refined policies with frustration and a curse. South.

FRU'STRATIVE, frûs'trâ-tiv.[512] adj. [from frustrate.] Fallacious; disappointing. Ainsworth.

FRU'STRATORY, frûs'trâ-tûr-é.[512] adj. [from frustrate.] That makes any procedure void; that vacates any former process.

Bartolus restrains this to a frustatory appeal. Ayliffe.

FRU'STUM, frûs'tûm. n. s. [Latin.] A piece cut off from a regular figure. A term of science.

FRY, frî. n. s. [from froe, foam, Danish. Skinner.]

1. The swarm of little fishes just produced from the spawn.

They come to us, but as love draws;
He swallows us, and never chaws;
By him, as by chain'd shot, whole ranks do die;
He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry. Donne.

Forthwith the sounds and seas, each creek and bay,
With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals
Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave in sculls, that oft
Bank the mid-sea. Milton.

The angler had the hap to draw up a very little fish from among the fry. L'Estrange.

So close behind some promontory lie
The huge leviathans t' attend their prey;

And give no chace, but swallow in the fry,
Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way.
Dryden.

2. Any swarm of animals; or young people in contempt.

Out with the fry of these rakehell horseboys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kern continually supplied and maintained. Spenser.

Them before the fry of children young,
Their wanton sports and childish mirth did play,
And to the maidens sounding timbrels sung.
Fairy Queen.

Draw me no constellations there,
Nor dog, nor goat, nor bull, nor bear;
Nor any of that monstrous fry
Of animals that stock the sky. Oldham.

The young fry must be held at a distance, and kept under the discipline of contempt. Collier.

FRY, frī. n. s. A kind of sieve.

He dresseth the dust from malt, by running it through a fan or fry. Mortimer.

To FRY, frī. v. a. [frigo, Latin; ffrio, Welsh; frijck, Erse.] To dress food by roasting it in a pan on the fire.

To FRY, frī. v. n.

1. To be roasted in a pan on the fire.

2. To suffer the action of fire.

So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise;
Above the brims they force their fiery way,
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.
Dryden.

3. To melt with heat.

Spices and gums about them melting fry,
And, phœnix-like, in that rich nest they die.
Waller.

4. To be agitated like liquor in the pan on the fire.

Oil of sweet almonds, newly drawn with sugar, and a little spice, spread upon bread toasted, is an excellent nourisher; but then, to keep the oil from frying in the stomach, drink mild beer after it. Bacon.

Where no ford he finds, no water fries,
Nor billows with unequal murmurs roar,
But smoothly slide along, and swell the shoar,
That course he steer'd. Dryden.

FRY, frī. n. s. [from the verb.] A dish of things fried.

FRY'INGPAN, frī'ĭng-păn. n. s. [fry and pan.] The vessel in which meat is roasted on the fire.

FU'GITIVE, fū'jĕ-tĭv. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. One who runs from his station or duty.

Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects; for they are light to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. Bacon.

Back to thy punishment,
False fugitive! and to thy speed add wings,
Lest with a whip of scorpions I pursue
Thy ling'ring. Milton.

We understand by some fugitives, that he hath commanded
The generals to return with victory, or expect
A shameful death. Denham.

2. One who takes shelter under another power from punishment.

Too many, being men of good inheritance, are fled beyond the seas, where they live under princes which are her majesty's professed enemies; and converse and are confederates with other traytors and fugitives there abiding. Spenser.

Your royal highness is too great and too just, either to want or to receive the homage of rebellious fugitives. Dryden.

3. One hard to be caught or detained.

What muse but his can Nature's beauties hit,
Or catch that airy fugitive, call'd wit. Harte.

FU'GITIVENESS, fū'jĕ-tĭv-nĕs. n. s. [from fugitive.]

1. Volatility; fugacity.

That divers salts, emerging upon the analysis of many concretes, are very volatile, is plain from the fugitiveness of salt and of hartshorn attending in distillation. Boyle.

2. Instability; uncertainty.

FUGUE, fēwg.[337] n. s. [French; from fuga, Latin.] In musick, some point consisting of four, five, six, or any other number of notes, begun by some one single part, and then seconded by a third, fourth, fifth, and sixth part, if the composition consists of so many; repeating the same or such like notes, so that the several parts follow, or come in one after another in the same manner; the leading parts still flying before those that follow. Harris.

The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetorick of repetition and traduction. Bacon.

The skilful organist plies his grave and fancied descant in lofty fugues. Milton.

His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.

Long as a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire. Addison.

FU'LCIMENT, fŭl'sĕ-mĕnt. n. s. [fulcimen, fulcimentum, Lat.] That on which a body rests, which acts or is acted upon at each end, as a balance or a lever.

The power that equiponderates with any weight, must have the same proportion unto it, as there is betwixt their several distances from the centre or fulciment. Wilkins.

To FUL'FI'L, fŭl-fĭl'. v. a. [full and fill.]

1. To fill till there is no room for more. This sense is now not used.

And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Sparre up the sons of Troy. Shaksp.

2. To answer any prophecy or promise by performance.

They knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets, which are read every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him. Acts.

The fury bath'd them in each other's blood;
Then, having fix'd the fight, exulting flies,
And bears fulfill'd her promise to the skies. Dryd.

3. To answer any purpose or design.

Here nature seems fulfill'd in all her ends. Milton.

4. To answer any desire by compliance or gratification.

If on my wounded breast thou drop'st a tear,
Think for whose sake my breast that wound did bear;
And faithfully my last desires fulfil,
As I perform my cruel father's will. Dryden.

5. To answer any law by obedience.

Love worketh no ill to his neighbour, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. Romans.

This I my glory account
My exaltation, and my whole delight,
That thou in me well-pleas'd declar'st thy will Fulfilled, which to fulfill is all my bliss. Milton.

FULFRA'UGHT, fûl-frâwt'. adj. [full and fraught.] Fully stored.

Thy fall hath left a kind of blot
To mark the fulfraught man, the best endu'd,
With some suspicion. Shaksp.

FUME, fûme. n. s. [fumée, French; fumus, Latin.]

1. Smoke.

Thus fighting fires awhile themselves consume;
But streight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bridges of their fume,
And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly.
Dryden.

2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.

Love is a smoke rais'd with a fume of sighs:
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes.
Shakspeare.

It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, or other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon.

In winter, when the heat without is less, breath becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume or crasser vapour; and may by proper vessels, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward.

3. Exhalation from the stomach.

The fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brains of a man overcharged with it. South.

Plung'd in sloth we lie and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryden.

Pow'r, like new wine, does your weak brain surprise,
And its mad fumes in your discourses rise;
But time these yielding vapours will remove:
Mean while I'll taste the sober joys of love.
Dryden.

4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.

The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty. South.

5. Any thing unsubstantial.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassal so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakspeare.

6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.

Plato's great year would have had some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influence upon these things below, than they have, but in gross. Bacon.

To lay aside all that may seem to have a shew of fumes and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work. Bacon.

To FUME, fûme. v. n. [fumer, French; fumo, Latin.]

1. To smoke.

Their pray'rs pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd
By the great intercessor; came in sight
Before their father's throne. Milton.

From thence the fuming trail begun to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head.
Dryden.

Strait hover round the fair her airy band;
Some as she sipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd.
Pope.

2. To vapour; to yield exhalations, as by heat.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shakspeare.

Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always boil in each extended vein. Roscommon.

3. To pass away in vapours.

We have
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning:
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
Before our hands be at work. Ben Jonson.

Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Cheyne.

The first fresh dawn then wak'd the gladden'd race,
Of uncorrupted man, nor blush'd to see
The sluggard sleep beneath its sacred beam;
For their light slumbers gentle fum'd away.
Thomson.

4. To be in a rage; to be hot with anger.

When he knew his rival free'd and gone,
He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan.
He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground,
The hollow tow'r with clamors rings around.
Dryden.

To FUME, fûme. v. a.

1. To smoke; to dry in the smoke.

Those that serve for hot countries they used at first to fume, by hanging them upon long sticks one by one, and drying them with the smoke of a soft fire. Carew.

Follow your function; go, and batten on cold bits.
Shakspeare.

5. Office of any particular part of the body.

The bodies of men, and other animals, are excellently well fitted for life and motion; and the several parts of them well adapted to their particular functions. Bentley.

6. Power; faculty: either animal or intellectual.

Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suiting
With forms to his conceit. Shakspeare.

Nature seems
In all her functions weary of herself;
My race of glory run, and race of shame;
And I shall shortly be with them that rest. Milton.
